Glastonbury Abbey launches cookbook

Richard Bourgeois, OSB and includes photos of the monks and extended community as well as more than 500 recipes.

Glastonbury Abbey, Hingham was established on the Feast of the Holy Cross, September 14, 1954. Cardinal Cushing blessed the monastery on that day.

Fr. Timothy Joyce, OSB, well known Celtic Spirituality Author has written a commemorative history of Glastonbury Abbey, documenting the arrival of the first monks and the development and services of the monastery over the past 50 years in Hingham. The history will be launched on Nov. 9 at the Abbey Conference Center at 3 p.m.

"Monastic Spirituality in the 21st Century" is the jubilee theme for the Abbey's annual inter-religious Lecture Series "Listening to Other Voices which begins on Thursday, Oct. 9 at 7:15 p.m.

Buttonwood to host coffee with authors

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host its semiannual "Coffee with the Authors" on Tues. Oct. 7 at the Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset from 9:45 to 11: 30 am.

Featured authors will be George Howe Colt for "The Big House" (Scribner, $26), Dawn Clifton Tripp for "Moon Tide: A Novel" (Random House, $24.95) and Stephen Puleo for "Dark Tide: The Great Molasses Flood of 1919" (Beacon Press, $25).

"The Big House" by Colt is an intimate and poignant history of a sprawling century-old summer-house on Cape Cod, which reveals not just one family's fascinating story but also a vanishing way of life Colt is a former staff writer at Life magazine whose articles have been published in "The New York Times", "Civilization", and "Mother Jones", among other publications.

"Moon Tide" by Tripp is a lush and haunting first novel, that follows the lives of three women in a small fishing town on the Massachusetts coast, from 1913 to the Great New England Hurricane of 1938. Tripp graduated from Harvard with an A.B. in literature. She lives in Massachusetts with her husband and son.

Puleo discusses "Dark Tide: The Great Boston Molasses Flood of 1919", a compelling story of a man-made disaster. Shortly after noon on January 15, 1919, a fifty foot-tall steel tank filled with 2.3 million gallons of molasses collapsed on Boston's waterfront, disgorging its contents as a fifteen-foot-high wave of molasses that briefly traveled at thirty-five miles per hour. When the tide receded, a section of the city's North End had been transformed into a war zone. The Boston molasses flood claimed the lives of twenty-one people and scores of animals, injured 150, and caused widespread destruction. Puleo is a former award-winning newspaper reporter and now works in corporate public relations in the Boston area.

Advance reservations and ticketing are required and can be made by calling Buttonwood at 781-383-2665. Tickets are $13 per person, nonrefundable. Please call Buttonwood to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Keeping kids safely seated

Officer helps at 'Check Point'

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset Police Officer Jeffrey Treanor continues to insure that area children are safely restrained when they are in motor vehicles.

To that end, Treanor – who is certified in child safety seat installation — participated with two other installers on a recent Saturday in a "Check Point" at Babys R Us on Grossman Drive in Braintree. The Municipal Police Institute of Shrewsbury sponsored the event in conjunction with the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau.

Treanor — who explains most parents buy a car seat for a child, read the directions, and then think their youngster is adequately protected — says the reality is 90 percent of child restraints in Massachusetts are not properly installed.

Treanor said he, a Lincoln police officer and a Fall River firefighter, installed 17 car seats in about 2-1/2 hours. It takes about 40 minutes to install a seat.

"It was a free service offered on a first-come, first-served basis," said Treanor.

Babys R Us provided three free seats to replace those that the installers found were defective or more than six years old.

Officer Jeffrey Treanor instructs a mother about the importance of having her baby's car seat installed properly.

Last March, the Cohasset Police Department launched a free child-seat installation program, which has been a big success. Treanor, who completed a 32-hour course to become a certified installer, said he has installed about 80 child seats since the program began.

"It's growing every week," he said.

To make an appointment to have a child seat installed at the station, call the Cohasset police at 781-383-1055.

Treanor, who said it is preferable to bring the child along so the seat can be adjusted accordingly, suggests the parent bring something along to occupy the child during the installation.

Country's hot new Canadian import

Carolyn Dawn Johnson makes tour stop in Plymouth

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Carolyn Dawn Johnson is country music's hottest Canadian import since Shania Twain.

The Alberta-born singer's 2001 major-label debut CD, Room With a View, debuted in the Top Ten on Billboard's Top Country Albums chart, spawning three hit singles including "Georgia," the Top Five "Complicated" and the Top Ten "I Don't Want You To Go." Johnson then snapped up honors for "Top New Female Vocalist at the Academy of Country Music Awards in 2002, and "Favorite New Artist — Country" at the American Music Awards in '03, among other industry awards and nominations.

Country sensation Carolyn Dawn Johnson performs at Plymouth Memorial Hall Saturday, Sept. 27.

She's earned wide critical praise for her distinct, twangy vocal flavor and literate, lyrical songwriting style, which has also yielded chartbusting hits for other singers, such as Chely Wright's "Single White Female" and Jo Dee Messina's Top Five "Downtime." And she's spent much of the last four years on tour with the likes of Martina McBride, Reba McEntire and Alan Jackson to name a few.

Johnson is currently splitting her time between the latest series of North American dates and wrap-up studio sessions for the singer's long-awaited followup CD, which she said is expected for release by late spring or early summer 2004. While on tour this fall the singer makes a local stop at Plymouth Memorial Hall this Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m. For this particular date the singer is crossing paths with opening act Bering Strait, the Russian-emigre country music band recently profiled in a spot on CBS's 60 Minutes.

On her debut discwhat also sets Johnson apart from most of the other contemporary country songbirds is that she wrote or co-wrote all of the album's 11 songs.

"I'm a songwriter as well as a singer, and I've done all my own writing from the beginning," said Johnson on the road from Ontario last week. "That's never the easiest Diane Lane, who debuted in "A Little Romance," returns to romance in her new film.

Lovers' Lane

Actress finds romance in 'Tuscan Sun'

By Bob Tremblay
STAFF WRITER

Actress Diane Lane, who would likely look beautiful after spending two weeks on a desserted island, enters a room at the Ritz-Carlton Boston Common wearing a black skirt and lavender V-neck sweater.

She looks beautiful.

And feels cold. She adjusts the room's thermostat before sitting down to talk about her latest film, "Under the Tuscan Sun," opening Sept. 26.

While her beauty is undeniable, it's only one part of the Lane portfolio. Talent takes up significant space, too. Last year, she was nominated for an Oscar, a Golden Globe and a Screen Actors Guild Award as best actress for her portrayal of an adulteress in "Unfaithful."

Her resume also reflects her longevity. The 38-year-old Lane has been acting professionally since she was 6 and making movies since she was 13.

Baking powder biscuits

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I grew up in a small Vermont town high in the Green Mountains and Marie Briggs, our town baker, made the best fluffy, high-rise biscuits I have ever eaten. When the biscuits were cool, she stored them in cookie tins, separated by layers of wax paper, and then brought them to covered-dish suppers around town, including the annual August ox roast or birthday celebrations down at the corner house where, on a slow night, we showed movies from the agricultural extension service on growing rutabaga or canning beans.

In an effort to recreate these two-fisted biscuits, I started with shortening. Biscuits can be made with most any type of shortening including butter, vegetable shortening, lard or a combination. James Beard even had a recipe for cream biscuits that had no shortening at all. I made all recipes and preferred a combination of butter and Crisco vegetable shortening. The amount of fat was also critical and, after many tests, settled on 7 tablespoons of fat (4 of butter, 3 of Crisco) per two cups of flour.

I then went on to test buttermilk versus regular milk and found that biscuit dough made from the former was substantially better, with more rise and more flavor. This is due to the large amount of lactic acid that is present in buttermilk which, when in the presence of baking soda, creates lots of carbon dioxide gas, thus providing plenty of lift. However, if you do not happen to have buttermilk on hand, I offer a regular milk version below. In Nikka Hazelton's "American Home Cooking," she suggests letting buttermilk biscuits sit on the counter for 10 minutes before baking. I tested this and found that this adds a bit of height to the biscuits as it gives the dough extra time to rise.

Cutting in the butter and Crisco to the flour can be done by hand, with a pastry blender, or in a food processor, the latter method being best. For a foolproof method, place all dry ingredients in the bowl of the processor and pulse to combine. Add the butter (cut the butter into small pieces first) and then pulse 6 times for 1 second each. Add the Crisco, and pulse 5 more times, each for one second. If using other methods, I have found it best to overmix rather than undermix. The dough should be mealy and well-coated with fat.

After making thousands of biscuits, I have found that barely touching the dough, using not much more than the weight of the rolling pin to roll it out, is the easiest route to a light, fluffy product. I also like my biscuits tall so I cut the dough when it's about a 1/2-inch thick, no thinner. Many recipes also suggest that the dough be kneaded 5 or 6 times after it is removed from the bowl and before rolling, but I have found that this is a mistake. In fact, I just press the dough together into a ball, place it on a floured surface, lightly flour the top of the dough, and then roll it out. If you don't have a biscuit cutter, use the mouth of a thin-walled drinking glass or the screw top from a jar. Don't twist the dough when you cut biscuits — just press down straight and decisively.

BAKING POWDER BISCUITS

If you do not have buttermilk, you can substitute regular sweet milk as indicated below. For extra height, let the cut biscuits sit on the baking sheet for 10 minutes before baking.

2 cups flour
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
4 tablespoons chilled butter
3 tablespoons chilled vegetable shortening
2/3 to 3/4 cup buttermilk

1. Heat oven to 425 degrees. Combine the flour, salt, baking powder, and baking soda in the bowl of a food processor. Process for 2 seconds to mix.

2. Add the butter, cut into 1-tablespoon bits, to the flour and pulse 6 times for one second each. Add shortening and pulse another 5 times or until mixture looks like coarse meal (the flour should take on a slightly yellowish hue from the butter).

3. Place mixture into a large bowl. Using a rubber spatula, fold mixture together while adding buttermilk in a very thin stream. When mixture starts to hold together, press the dough with the side of the spatula. Note that you may use a little more or less than the 2/3-cup of buttermilk called for in this recipe.

4. Turn onto a floured surface and roll out dough very gently to a thickness of 1/2-inch. Use a biscuit cutter to cut, and then place on a cookie sheet and bake in the preheated oven for about 10 minutes, turning the sheet after 5 minutes in the oven.

Makes 10 thick 2 3/4-inch biscuits or 16 2-inch biscuits.

SWEET-MILK VARIATION

Substitute milk for buttermilk, add 3 teaspoons cream of tartar, and reduce baking powder to 1 teaspoon.

thing for a relatively new country artist trying to break into the Nashville market, where they're so used to using outside songwriters to get material for their artists and almost every aspect of a singer's career is so tightly controlled. But in my case, my writing is the main thing that got me noticed and through the door in the first place."

From prototypically humble country beginnings, Johnson was raised on a farm in the town of Deadwood, Alberta, a village of 200 where, the singer said, "we had a post office, a church, a portable school and a store that was closed." The family later moved to the relative metropolis of Westlock, Alberta (pop: 7000), before Johnson broke into the music scene while at college in Vancouver and later relocated to Nashville.

The singer's overall style reflects the diversity of influences named in her press kit, including favorite rock acts such as Fleetwood Mac along with country stars like McIntyre and Marty Stuart. Johnson's debut disc also flourished a rock influence musically, favoring such instrumental backing as slide guitars, dobro and Hammond B-3 organ over fiddles and pedal steels. Arguably, the best result therein is the hit "I Don't Want You To Go," which strikes a Shania/"Honey I'm Home" style groove but rocks harder.

Johnson admits that recording is a painstaking, time-consuming process at this stage in her career, which she said, is the reason the followup album seems overdue at this point.

"I don't want to rely on outside producers for remixing and mastering when I'm not around," Johnson said. "I want to be there in the studio for every note."

Playboy centerfold and singer Colleen Farrington, she turned in a particularly auspicious debut in "A Little Romance," co-starring Laurence Olivier. The performance landed her on the cover of Time magazine.

She returns to the subject of romance in "Under the Tuscan Sun."

"I was very charmed by it," she says, describing her response to the script. "It almost seemed like a dream. ... I felt it would be such a gift, not only to me as an experience but from me to the audience as an experience because they don't make movies like this anymore. They're always tough, cool, fast and hip, sort of clamoring. This is such a reprieve from those movies. ... It's a bit of a fairy tale. It's about people searching for love and the confidence to love again after things didn't work out."

In "Under the Tuscan Sun," Lane plays Frances Mayes, a San Francisco book critic and writer. This time, Lane's character is on the receiving end of adultery and following a nasty divorce, travels to Italy. There, she impulsively buys a villa in Tuscany and tries to turn her life around.

The movie takes its title from Mayes' book, but similarities between what in essence is a travelogue and the film are few. The movie's writer-director-producer Audrey Wells ("Guinevere") added characters, drama and romance in the screenplay that are nowhere to be found in the book.

Lane describes the process of working with Wells as "a very pleasant experience."

"I've worked with women directors before," says Lane. "That's not necessarily a plus. There's no inherent gifts a woman has versus a man to direct. Sometimes there's an insecurity that's overcompensated for, but Audrey had none of that. She never lost any of her femininity while she was a strong director and a confident helmsman on the set. That's rare."

Wells has returned the compliment, saying that there's "not an ounce of prima donna" in Lane.

The relationship between the two women was collaborative. "There were some times where I could pitch in and have more of a voice than if it were my first movie," says Lane. "And there were some improvised things."

For example, there's a scene in the film where Lane's character gets girl-school giddy after re-igniting her love life with a very handsome Italian man. When she returns home, she exuberantly jumps up and down on her bed and shouts, "I still got it!"

Working in beautiful Italy should have made this a dream job, but Lane says it only ramped up the guilt. "If you were in some gulag, it would have felt right to be earning money doing it," she says. "But I got no sympathy from anybody at home, saying how homesick I was. And I was terribly homesick. My daughter had just started fourth grade. I felt remiss in being away. A lot of maternal guilt there. She did visit me twice."

Lane's daughter, Eleanor, 10, is from her marriage to actor Christopher Lambert. Divorced from Lambert, Lane is now engaged to actor Josh Brolin, 35, whose father, James Brolin, is married to Barbra Streisand.

Lane says a spring wedding is planned.

And then it's back to the acting career, which got a boost with the Oscar nomination.

"I did move up on the list of people who are asked to work," she says. "And it's nice to get a raise, says Lane, who reportedly received $5 million for "Tuscan Sun," a $2 million hike from "Unfaithful."

But Lane is pragmatic about stardom and acting.

"It's like being a sports figure," she says. "At a certain moment in time you're very popular, and then after that you might find yourself selling cars on TV. And that's fine, you just never know."

As for beauty, it isn't always a joy forever. "Unless you're a character actor, which means as a woman not known for your beauty, quote unquote, then you're allowed to continue to morph beyond your beauty years. And that's my goal," says Lane. "My goal is to not be too enslaved by the limitations of having to be young and beautiful forever because it doesn't work that way. We'll see. I may be reading these interviews from my trailer home in a decade."

Fall renovation of lawns and gardens

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

September is a month of transition in the garden. Shorter day length and cool temperatures initiate the dormant phase of many plants as perennials, trees and shrubs begin to don their varied autumn tints while storing energy to survive the winter ahead. Plants may flop and sprawl and the perennial border often becomes a bit unsightly but with a little weeding and trimming, the garden can regain its tidy appearance.

Prolonged dampness seems to have taken its toll on the foliage of a wide variety of plants this season. Molds, mildews and leaf spot diseases have produced brown, black, yellow and white lesions spoiling the overall appearance of numerous plants. Much of this foliage is best trimmed and discarded. Avoid disposing of your diseased leaves on compost piles as spores may over-winter and reinfect plants in future years.

As a devoted collector of several hundred daylily cultivars, I feel obligated to comment on recent publicity regarding a disease known as 'daylily rust'. My garden is designated a National Display Garden for the Daylily Society and I have had some personal experience with this disease. Although I recognize the need to inform the public about the potential for contamination by this contagious disease, suggestions by local garden talk show hosts and writers that daylilies are doomed are creating a minor panic, leading many gardeners to dispose of plants that are not infected. I do not personally believe that rust poses a long-term threat for local gardeners.

Several expensive daylily cultivars that I received as potted plants during the summer of 2001 developed rust. The undersides of the leaves were covered with fuzzy yellow spots in late summer, reminiscent of the dotted-Swiss fabric of yesteryear. I segregated these diseased plants from my other pots once I realized I had rust and moved them outside to my deck during the late fall. The winter of 2001-2002 was extremely mild and yet the minimal freezing temperatures that winter were sufficient to eradicate the disease from the infected plants, which I did not spray or treat in any other manner. Despite the damp conditions this season, the rust has not returned. Other members of the New England Daylily Society who experienced even greater infestations have had similar experiences. I should also mention that I purchased several 'Twice as Nice' daylily cultivars from a local nursery this spring and none of these plants has shown any evidence of rust.

Leaf streak disease, however, is prevalent this season due to the damp conditions plus many daylilies begin to decline at this time of year causing yellowing leaves. If you need reassurance, use a white facial tissue to wipe the underside of suspicious leaves. A dark yellow-orange stain would appear if the plant has rust. If you did not purchase new daylilies this season, it is highly unlikely that you have the disease nor do I personally believe that rust will survive New England winters.

As I weed, clip and haul, I am constantly making mental notes of design changes that I need to make in my gardens. Even a well-planned garden requires an occasional revision and after many years, a total renovation may be a necessity. Depletion of the soil, the maturation of plants and environmental influences take their toll plus it seems to be human nature to seek periodic changes in our surroundings. We redecorate our homes and update our wardrobes. Similarly, even a successful garden needs a facelift once in a while to give it new vitality and to eliminate some of the clutter that accumulates over the years.

Renovations often require that you become a ruthless critic, particularly with overgrown plants. The removal of only a few plants may provide the necessary space for other established plants to find sufficient growing room but in many instances, years of overcrowding produces lopsided plants which may never regain an attractive shape despite judicious pruning. Foundation plantings that have been constantly clipped for a period of twenty years or more are difficult to rejuvenate and usually necessitate the total eradication of old, woody shrubs. Replacing only a few of the tired shrubs tends to be problematic as your new introductions are generally considerably smaller and disrupt the elements of balance, scale and proportion.

Newer perennial borders may require only a few modifications. The addition of spring-flowering bulbs, several new perennials or minimal transplanting may be all that is needed to resolve color clashes, strengthen a particular pattern or modify height or space arrangements. Other borders may call for a little widening or lengthening to accommodate those new perennials you found on sale or to make room for vigorous growers that have started to encroach on the edges of the current bed.

Very tired, overgrown gardens may require more drastic measures to bring them back to their original beauty. Depleted soils, or those that may have become compacted over the years, will need replenishing with compost and manure, peat moss, lime and fertilizer. In order to properly incorporate these additives, nearly every existing plant may have to be lifted. It may be wise to research some of these valued plants as some resent transplanting and should be left in place while others can be temporarily relocated and replanted once the improvements are complete. Large borders should be done in stages.

Share seedlings and divisions with gardening friends or heel them into holding beds or the vegetable garden as crops are removed. Garden renovations can be hard work but your efforts will be rewarded with a healthy, rejuvenated landscape full of glorious flowers next season.

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

A POWERFUL INCENTIVE

While in-the-ear (ITE) and in-the-canal (ITC) hearing instruments are often preferred for their cosmetic appeal, behind-the-ear (BTE) hearing instruments offer several advantages over their more diminutive counterparts. Behind-the-ear hearing instruments include a microphone, amplifier, and receiver housed inside a small curved case that is worn behind the ear and connected to the earmold by a small plastic tube. This type of instrument is easier to handle than smaller ones. It is also more powerful, making it suitable for those with moderate to severe hearing losses. In addition, its reliability and durability make it well suited for use by children, who will only outgrow the earmold portion of the instrument. And, BTE instruments use larger batteries, which are easier to handle.

Today, there are more choices than ever before for people purchasing hearing aids. How do you decide which is the right one for you? The best way is to place your trust in the hands of a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist with a reputation for skill, knowledge, compassion, integrity. We believe you'll find this and more here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. Why not call us at 781-337-1144 to schedule a free hearing test. We offer FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

P.S. BTE hearing instruments can provide more amplification than smaller devices due to their stronger amplifiers and larger batteries.

"Miss Saigon"

The story of two young lovers torn apart by their separate worlds and yet held together by a burning passion and the fate of a small child is at the emotional heart of "Miss Saigon," the musical by Alain Boublil, Richard Maltby, Jr., and Claude-Michel Schonberg.

The splashy stage epic includes songs such as "The Heat Is On In Saigon," "I Still Believe," and "The American Dream" which evoke the steamy nights, passion and danger of Saigon in 1975, during the final days leading up to the American evacuation. The sixth longest running show in Broadway history, "Miss Saigon" has also been performed in 13 countries in 8 different languages, and has been seen by more than 28 million people worldwide. More than 13.2 million people in North America have seen "Miss Saigon," many of those here in greater Boston where the show has become an almost perennial favorite.

"Miss Saigon" will be at The Wang Theatre through Sept. 28. For Tickets visit The Wang Theatre Box Office, 270 Tremont Street, Boston, online at www.wangcenter.org, or call 1-800-447-7400

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 24

The next couple of days may be stressful. A positive, peaceful attitude is your ace in the hole. Make light of situations you can't control. Stay busy with practical projects. Tackle jobs you've been putting off, like cleaning out cluttered areas. Get your life in order. The moon travels in meticulous Virgo, active until 9:52 p.m., when it aligns with Pluto. Take quiet time out for yourself; meditate, listen to music, enjoy a nature walk.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 25

The dark side of a new moon is a time for letting go and clearing the way for new activities. People may be distracted, temperamental, moody. Ready yesterday's advice. Pursue activities that help you to maintain a relaxed, positive outlook. Venus aligns with Saturn at 11:20 a.m. The Virgo moon continues inactive travel until 6:49 p.m., when it enters Libra. The new moon culminates at 11:09 p.m., 3-degrees Libra.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26

Gear up for a busy day. The moon continues its travel in Libra, forming four major alignments to planets. There is one rough spot in effect between 1:17-4:17 p.m., when the moon aligns with Saturn. Keep it light and go with the flow of things. The planet Mars takes the spotlight today, because Mars prepares to turn direct early tomorrow morning. This combination may spark romantic fireworks this evening.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 27

At 3:52 a.m. Mars, standing at 0-degrees Pisces, begins to travel in direct motion. Mars has been traveling in retrograde since July 29. The moon continues its travel in Libra, placing a focus on relationships. This is a favorable time for meeting people, beginning new alliances or for strengthening the ties in existing partnerships. The Libra moon interacts with Uranus at 7:10 p.m. and becomes inactive. A passionate Scorpio moon takes over at 7:52 p.m. and forms a flowing contact to Mars at 8:04 p.m. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

A Scorpio moon makes this a day to spend time alone. Others may be quiet, pensive. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Pluto warns you to choose your words carefully. Thoughtless remarks may come back to haunt you. Zero in on areas of your life that are not working, and create a new game plan. Review your priorities; set new goals. Look within and you will find what you need to get back on track.

MONDAY, SEPT. 29

The moon continues to travel in Scorpio, generating a serious mood. Channel energy constructively; take on a full work agenda. Focus on projects that require mental precision, troubleshooting, problem-solving. You can cut through obstacles and get to the bottom of things. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Pluto enhances creativity. Don't do anything risky or act on impulse this evening. The Scorpio moon aligns with Uranus at 8:08 p.m. and becomes inactive. The moon enters Sagittarius at 8:57 p.m. and aligns with Mars at 9:14 p.m. Stop, look and listen.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 30

The green light is on for new beginnings across the board today. The moon travels in optimistic Sagittarius, prompting you to break new ground at home or at work. The downside of today's planetary picture is that it may be difficult to focus on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. To avoid spinning your wheels, be sure to have a clear plan of action. Go for the gold. Kick back and enjoy favorite pastimes this evening.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 1

After a barrage of planetary activity in the past two months, October offers an opportunity to catch your breath and focus on new ideas and undertakings. The first three weeks are most favorable for getting new projects off the ground.

A Sagittarius moon continues to generate optimism and confidence today. New beginnings are promoted until 10:25 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A Capricorn moon takes over at 11:21 p.m.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. This is a day to get things done. Plan to initiate new activities before 12:34 p.m., when the Capricorn moon forms a harmonious contact to Jupiter. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:09 p.m. A full moon is building and will culminate October 10. Sidestep doubts, frustrations between 7:22-10:22 p.m., when the moon opposes Saturn. Focus on the positives and go with the flow.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3

A Capricorn moon prompts you to be more ambitious and focused today. You can be most productive. Zero in on career issues, business decisions. Influences are prime for making long-range plans or taking on new responsibilities. Today's planetary combination inspires judgments based on a combination of knowledge and intuition. The Capricorn moon forms a harmonious contact to Mercury at 6:40 p.m. and becomes inactive. The sun forms a flowing 120-degree contact to Neptune this evening. Relax and recharge your batteries.

Lost cats falling prey to coyotes

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cat and dog lovers could debate forever on which animal is "man's best friend."

But one thing is for sure, there should be no such thing as an "outdoor" house cat any more because the chances are very good the cat could fall prey to a coyote.

Cohasset Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy urges residents to keep their cats inside at all times.

"You cannot let a domestic cat outside," he said. "If you do, sooner or later it will be taken by a coyote – plain and simple."

Murphy says the spate of "missing cat" signs around town and other reports of missing cats are a direct result of the coyote population.

He explains occasionally cats go missing because they are lost or trapped somewhere and can't get out.

"But that would be too much of a coincidence to have the number of cats that are missing now (due to being trapped or

Neighbors won't put out Cedarmere welcome mat

Planning Board is biased, they say

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"Anything they say is good and anything we say is questioned."
— Karla Watts, 670 Chief Justice Cushing Highway

Abutters to the proposed Cedarmere project are still showing up in large numbers to voice their concerns over the proposed 105-unit senior housing development and won't be backing down any time soon. Some have hired lawyers and are prepared to fight the development to the end.

Of major concern to the neighbors are not only the potential impacts on traffic, surface water drainage, and septic systems, but the Planning Board itself, which some think has taken sides with the development team.

"You are pro-them," said Karla Watts, 670 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. "Anything they say is good and anything we say is questioned."

But Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said concerns of abutters are very real and "we're really and truly seeking out comments."

Because other boards have not made their recommendations on the project, the Planning Board must wait before it is able to make a final decision. Of concern is whether the Sewer Commission will allow the development to tie in to the town's sewer system, or whether developers will have to go back to the drawing board and design an on-site system.

'Rails with Trails' on the right track

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

As riders look out the window from their seats on the Greenbush line, it is possible they will see families taking walks together or friends riding bikes as a result of the "Rails with Trails" program.

Last week, the Board of Health recommended Alta Planning & Design of the Waterfield Design Group, as the company to conduct the town's $25,000 feasibility study for "Rails with Trails." Town Meeting OK'd money from the Community Preservation Fund to pay for the study.

According to Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo, the feasibility study is the first step in obtaining a 90 percent grant from the Federal Department of Transportation to pay for the path under state "greenspace" regulations.

After receiving proposals from eight interested companies, the Board of Health narrowed down applicants to its top three choices. Finalists were then asked to give a presentation to the board. After meeting with all three companies, the board met to discuss their possibilities.

"Officially, they all meet the criteria," said member Peggy Chapman during discussion with Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik and Bobo.

"All three are highly qualified and all have walked the 3-1/2 miles," said Bobo.

However, after some discussion, it was clear to which company they felt came out on top. "I don't think there's any question Alta is first," said Bobo.

Because the board was not able to see the bids for the proposals, money was not an issue in the decision making process. Once Town Manager Mark Haddad was notified by the board which company was picked, Haddad opened the envelopes for the bids.

The bid for Alta Planning & Design happened to be the lowest of the three at $24,750. The other two companies, VHB Vanasse Hangen Brustlin Inc., and Fay Spofford & Thorndike bid $25,000 and $25,750

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall this week:

Board of Assessors, Oct. 7, 4:15 p.m.

Board of Health, Oct. 6, 7 p.m.

Conservation Commission, Oct. 9 and Oct. 30, 7:30 p.m.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees, Oct. 8, 7 p.m., at the library

Planning Board, Oct. 15, 7:30 p.m. (zoning articles for Special Town Meeting); Oct. 22, 7:30 p.m.

School Committee, Oct. 2, 7 p.m., middle-high school library

Sewer Commission, Oct. 29, 6 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless indicated otherwise.

Avalon deliberations held Wednesday night

The Zoning Board of Appeals held public deliberations with AvalonBay, the developer seeking a comprehensive permit for a 200-unit apartment complex off Rte. 3A, last night after the Mariner went to press.

The deliberations were slated for this past Monday evening (Sept. 29) but the meeting was rescheduled to Wednesday because Monday's session was not posted as required by the Open Meeting Law.

Look for coverage of last night's deliberations in next week's Mariner.

Public Hearing on the Cook Estate

Selectmen will hold a public hearing Tuesday, Oct. 14 at 7:30 p.m. for the Board to present the Senior Housing Proposal, slated to be built on the Cook Estate, to the general public. Town Manager Mark Haddad said a draft request for proposal will be made available for anyone in town, including all town boards, and thinks the public hearing will be a great way to receive feedback from the community on the overall project. Haddad has already begun the process of due diligence on the property and said he will have a purchase and sale agreement ready for the board to review at next Tuesday's meeting. Haddad also asked Selectmen to consider hiring a real estate company to help market the property, but an agent will not be hired until after special Town Meeting.

Fighting jet pollution

There will be a meeting of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council on Oct. 8, Wednesday, 7:30 - 9 p.m. at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, 1117 Nantasket Ave, Hull. Please look at the council's website www.southshorejetpollution.org for a link to a map to the Hull Lifesaving Museum, which is near Hull Village.

Basement meeting room gets revamped

A new video camera will be mounted in the basement meeting room in Town Hall to allow more meetings to be broadcast on cable television. Town Manager Mark Haddad said it will cost $4520 for all equipment, but will provide a valuable service as currently, the Selectmen's meeting room is the only one fitted with camera equipment. Haddad also said he will be looking into getting better ventilation for the basement meeting room, as there have been some complaints of poor air quality during packed meetings. High School students are diligently working on completing the mural on the meeting room walls, and Haddad said he expects the hallway from the meeting room to the elevator will be complete by Christmas.

Deer Hill School rededication slated

With the completion of construction on the Deer Hill school, a rededication ceremony has been set for Friday Oct. 24 at 1 p.m. outside the school. All are welcome to attend.

Master Plan draft

Members of the Growth and Development Committee hope to have the town's Master Plan in its final form before the special fall Town Meeting Nov. 17. Selectmen Tom Callahan, who also sits on the Growth and Development Committee, said although the Master Plan is hoped to be completed in its entirety, votes will only be cast on those areas which require Town Meeting approval. There will be one public hearing before Town Meeting with the date to be announced.

New board members

Dick Avery of Surry Drive will join the Tri-Town Weir River Estuary Park Committee, filling the opening left when member Jim Shipsky stepped down last June, to devote more time to the Cohasset Environmental Support Group. Mike Westcott of River Road and Steve Lucitt of Jerusalem Road will join the Cohasset Housing Partnership. Selectmen Tom Callahan said there are still five open seats on the partnership, and the first two members will be appointed to three-year positions.

Streets need some patching up

Mary Bohmer, 45 Pleasant St., asked for the help of the Board of Selectmen in getting a pothole at the end of her street paved over. She said her road was dug up on July 28 and was never paved over, causing rocks to "go flying" when driven over. "This has been going on for two whole months," she said. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would talk to the sewer department about the issue. Haddad also said he will look into an exposed pipe on Doane Street which needs to be finished. "It doesn't make sense," Haddad said, adding town workers are usually very good about finishing roads once a project is complete.

New gas main to be installed

Selectmen have approved the installation of approximately 100 feet of two inch gas main on King Street from the existing home, number 281, southerly to house number 288. Harold Cooper, a representative from Keyspan Energy, said the main would be installed for a new house, for regular household use.

Town Meeting to vote on fate of Village wires

Sidewalk material also on the agenda

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen will let the town decide whether wires in the downtown area should be buried or not, and will include that question as an article on the warrant at the fall special Town Meeting.

Because the Greenbush line has been given the go-ahead, the town has a more concrete idea of what its Village plans could entail, knowing the MBTA will be responsible for the town parking lot. But, certain aspects are still up in the air, hindering the decision-making process. By allowing the town to vote on the wires, it will determine where other funds can be allocated and what viable options the town has.

In light of this decision, members of the Waterfield Group were asked to head back to the drawing board, to prepare both underground and above ground scenarios for wires, to be presented to residents at Town Meeting. This way, residents will be able to visualize both plans to make an informed decision.

The town hired the Waterfield Group to design a "revitalized" village. This is all part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project, which has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for through grants and private donations.

If the town decides to go with the underground option, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is unsure what the cost could be. Lisa Bailey of the Waterfield Group said a utility company employee must oversee the burying of the wires on a daily basis for the duration of the construction, which could take anywhere from nine to 12 months. She was told the only available employee would have to come from out of state and it would be the responsibility of the town to arrange for a place for that person to stay.

"They're making it as difficult as possible for us," said Haddad.

Haddad said that option was ridiculous and there is no way the town could pay for it. He said should the town decide to go with the underground plans, he would look into other options for having the wires buried, and take the advice of town counsel on the matter. He also said he would find more concrete figures regarding possible costs to the town, including how a possible 2 percent surcharge would be billed to residents and for how long.

After the vote at Town Meeting, Selectmen will know how much money they have to spend on various paving options. Many residents have expressed their interest in incorporating brick into the sidewalks.

"I thought using brick was cost prohibitive," said Tom Callahan. However, board members pointed out that if it is decided the wires will not be buried, there will me more money left over to spend on brick.

The Waterfield Group will design two sample paving alternatives for residents to have a look at during town meeting, which will serve as a starting point to narrow down the town's options. Residents will be able to check off which they like best, and Selectmen will have a better idea of which direction to proceed from there. Most likely, the plans will include concrete sidewalks with possible brick and/or granite accents and possibly painted crosswalks. Other materials such as cobblestones and different kinds of pavers might be considered as well.

Because residents seem to be happy with the corner of South Main and Elm streets, where the pump is located outside Cohasset Hardware, the Waterfield Group said they would look at mimicking the look of that corner in its plans.

"Why reinvent the wheel when everyone likes it?" said Callahan, who thought following the border scheme subconsciously picked by the town makes sense and would hopefully be embraced by residents.

Each time the Waterfield Group is asked to come up with another design, the town has to pay for its services, which adds up quickly, considering all the revisions they have been asked to make. Selectmen hope after votes are cast at Town Meeting, the question of what to do with the wires will be answered, as well as the preference for the downtown look. A final decision on how to proceed could be made soon thereafter.

School board hopefuls vow to run this spring

Familiar face picked for seat

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While the open seat on the School Committee has been filled by Rick Shea — Election Day in April could be very exciting, as all five who sought the post said they will campaign when the time comes.

"I'm already looking ahead to April," said Scott O'Grady of Sohier Street.

At the April Town Election, three School Committee seats will be up for grabs, two for three-year terms and one for the remaining year of Jane Pescatore's term. Pescatore stepped down in August to accept employment with the school department. Incumbents Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin could also seek reelection this spring – making a potential field of seven candidates at this point.

Shea of Margin Street — who served on the School Committee for three years in the mid-90s — garnered six out of nine possible votes last week from selectmen and the remaining four members of the school board, in a joint meeting held for the purpose of filling the vacant seat. Shea will fill Pescatore's seat until the town election.

Shea, O'Grady, and Rory Winters of Forest Avenue did not specify which terms they would seek next April. Adrienne MacCarthy of Doane Street said she will run for a three-year term. Betsy Connolly of Lily Pond Lane said she would run again, "knowing a one year term would be open." She feels one year is a commitment she would be able to make.

O'Grady and Winters are newcomers to town politics. Connolly was elected to fill the remaining year of a term on the School Committee in April 1999 and did not seek reelection the following year. MacCarthy ran for the School Committee in 2001 and after a recount, lost to incumbent Pat Martin by two votes.

While the School Committee's votes for the candidates were unanimously in favor of Shea, the Selectmen's votes were split, with Chairman Ronnie McMorris, Tom Callahan, and Merle Brown voting for MacCarthy, who is PSO president and a long-time member of the School Building Committee.

"I'm looking for someone who's not afraid to ask questions. Someone to break the mold, who's not going to be a lilting flower," said Callahan. "This process gives the Board of Selectmen a vote and I don't think we should shy away from that vote."

McMorris thought MacCarthy would be an appropriate choice because she is "very much aware, with three different children in three different schools."

But the School Committee had its eye on Shea, citing his prior experience on the board as one of the deciding factors.

With a difficult budget season ahead, the School Committee wanted a member who'd been through the process.

"We need someone who can hit the ground running," said School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo, adding he remembers his first six months on the committee and said it's an "entirely different world," a person needs to become familiar with, in order to participate fully in the process.

School Committee member Pat Martin agreed with DeGiacomo and said someone with experience is essential, "At a time when we're going to need to pull rabbits out of our hats."

At the close of the meeting, everyone offered their best wishes to Shea. "Congratulations, you have your work cut out for you," said McMorris.

The boards also praised all the candidates.

Nomination papers become available in January for those interested in running for the School Committee in the April Town Election.

Colorful crosswalks? Not in Cohasset

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset residents will be happy to hear Selectmen are taking their thoughts on what color to paint the crosswalks in town very seriously.

When the Waterfield Design Group proposed including bump-outs, or extended areas of sidewalk near crosswalk areas, as part of its revitalization plan, residents rallied together to put an end to what they thought would destroy the character of the entire Village. Bump-outs became history, and the townspeople had their first victory. But what to do with the crosswalks to make them stand out more, not only in the Village, but all over town, had Selectmen looking at paint colors this week.

Selectmen had planned on testing a crosswalk with a new color, in a conspicuous location on Ripley Road, to gauge reaction from residents before making a final decision on the matter. So when residents drove down Ripley Road, they would have kept their eyes open for the new colorful test crosswalk.

"I think green makes a lot of sense," said Town Manager Mark Haddad, adding that he had spoken with police Chief Robert Jackson, who did not have a color preference. Currently, Hingham has its downtown crosswalks painted green with white edging, which seems to be working out well.

"How about the stars and stripes, will that stand out?" asked Selectman Merle Brown.

Selectman Tom Callahan thought a "nice shade of blue," perhaps in the school's colors would be appropriate throughout town and could promote school spirit.

"I've already started to get negative comments about anything other than white," said Chairman Ronnie McMorris.

In the past, to improve safety around town, ideas were floated including using various traffic delineators such as barrels and different signage to draw attention to the crosswalks and increase pedestrian safety. Paint color was also discussed, and it seems green has remained an unpopular color choice ever since.

After some discussion, it became apparent to selectmen that nothing other than white crosswalks would be appropriate.

So white it is.

How to make an outdoor cat, a happy indoor cat

Cats need human companionship to be happy, and when they spend all their time out of doors, they get very little attention. An outdoor cat may welcome the indoors if he or she gets more love, attention, and play.

Provide your cat with secure cat condos which offer acceptable and interesting places for your cat to lounge, play and scratch. You should also provide scratching posts, corrugated cardboard or sisal rope for your cat to scratch and praise your cat for using them.

To encourage your ex-outdoor cat to exercise, offer interesting toys. These can consist of a long pole and attached line with fabric or feathers at the end of the line. Some cats enjoy searching for toys. If your cat likes to explore the house looking for "prey," hide his toys at various places so he can find them throughout the day.

Provide your indoor cat with fresh greens. You can buy kits that include containers and seeds to grow, or plant pesticide-free alfalfa, grass, bird seed, or catnip in your own container. This way, your cat can graze safely and not destroy your house plants.

If your cat remains stubbornly committed to life outdoors, help it adjust by providing an outdoor covered enclosure or run that the cat can access through a window or pet door. Such a facility gives the cat some of the advantages of being outside while minimizing the dangers. You can make the outdoor enclosure interesting and appealing by adding objects for the cat to explore, such as tree limbs, multilevel cat condos, tires, toys hanging from branches, and boxes in which the cat can curl up or hide.

If you cannot or prefer not to offer your cat a run or enclosure, consider leash-training the cat so you can supervise its time outside. Attach the leash to a harness. Never leave your cat outside unsupervised while on a leash or lead.

Additional tips for a happy indoor cat:

• Trim your cat's claws every one to two weeks to keep him from damaging furniture, rugs and drapes, or glue on artificial nail caps called "Soft Paws" every six to eight weeks.

• Provide one litter pan per cat and scoop the litter pan at least once daily. With unclumping litter, change once or twice weekly; with clumping litter, change every two to four weeks.

• Many cats enjoy the companionship of another cat or compatible dog of the opposite sex. If you can make the financial and emotional commitment, consider adopting another companion animal for yourself and for your cat.

Lost cats falling prey to coyotes lost)," he said, adding that small dogs should also be kept inside.

"Not too many cats can outrun or outwit a coyote," Murphy says. The coyotes have also depleted Cohasset's feral cat population., he says.

William Davis — wildlife biologist with MassWildlife, a state agency — says there is no ballpark number on how many coyotes are around.

"We classify them as common and abundant," Davis explains. "They are found throughout the state from Williamstown to Provincetown — and in every habitat type from the deepest forest to the outskirts of Boston and the beaches of Cape Cod."

Davis says coyotes are most active at dawn and dusk, but cat owners who want to be completely safe should keep their cats inside.

Murphy describes coyotes as cunning animals that are patient and stake out their prey.

"They monitor the area and know where to find meals," he says.

Murphy said coyotes are here to stay. While their numbers have stabilized, there is little that can be done to get rid of them for a couple of reasons, the animals' coats are no longer sought after by the fur industry and leg-hold traps are illegal in the state.

"They are practically a protected species," he says.

Davis of MassWildlife says there is a four-month coyote hunting season but there is little interest because the price is down on coyote pelts. About 100 are typically killed during the hunting season, too little to make a dent in the coyote population.

"We advise people to become educated and learn to live with them," Davis says.

He suggests residents make their property unfriendly to coyotes by eliminating potential food sources including not putting trash outside overnight, making sure compost piles are in a secure bin and clearing up fallen apples and pears from fruit trees. Woodpiles and crawl spaces can also provide habitat for mice and rabbits, which coyotes like to eat.

Davis says coyotes are self-regulating, so they won't over populate an area. He explains when food is lean coyote litters are smaller.

"When food is abundant, they have more pups," he says. "Each family unit will define a terrain large enough to sustain it."

Murphy, the animal control officer, says there is no secret to protecting domestic cats.

"If you love your cat – you'll keep it indoors," he says.

Town thinks septic system will work for Cook estate project

Planning Board gets an overview

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cook Estate development is being proposed — as is Cedarmere — under the town's new Senior Overlay District Bylaw, which requires a special permit from the Planning Board.

At this point, selectmen don't think the 87-unit, 55-plus senior housing complex proposed for the Cook Estate off Sohier Street is going to compete for town sewer capacity.

Consultants working with selectmen on the project are also cautiously optimistic the affordable units in the complex would "count" toward Cohasset's affordable housing inventory even though they might not be integrated throughout the complex.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told the Planning Board at a special meeting on the project Tuesday selectmen are optimistic an on-site septic system would work.

The sewer discussion took center stage during a presentation on the proposal by town consultants, GLC Development Resources of Boston, on the project that was unveiled last month after a series of closed-door negotiations with the Cook heirs over the summer.

The potential for additional sewer capacity at the treatment plant off Elm Street has made headlines recently as two other high-density projects proposed for Cohasset eye sewer connections.

AvalonBay, whose plans for a 200-unit apartment complex off Route 3A are currently before the Zoning Board of Appeals, has asserted its "rights" to sewer capacity if it becomes available. After being told the development couldn't hook up to the town sewer, the developer has spent months and considerable expense designing an on-site system with no guarantee it will pass muster with the Department of Environmental Protection or ZBA.

And the developers of Cedarmere, a proposed 105-unit 55-plus senior complex off Beechwood Street and 3A, have designed the project with sewer access in mind.

But homeowners of existing homes say they have first dibs on any sewer capacity, especially those around the environmentally fragile Little Harbor area. The Sewer Commission tried to clarify the issue in a recent letter stating Little Harbor has priority and saying Town Meeting would likely have to approve any extension of the sewer district.

But that didn't stop Planning Board member Robert Sturdy from saying the senior project proposed for the Cook Estate should apply for a sewer permit. He pointed out there are no guarantees Title 5 systems will stand the test of time. Title 5 is the state environmental code governing new septic systems and upgrades.

The Cook Estate development is being proposed — as is Cedarmere — under the town's new Senior Overlay District Bylaw, which requires a special permit from the Planning Board. The bylaw, permitting higher-density housing than would otherwise be allowed, requires the development include a percentage of affordable housing. It also requires those units be "counted" by the state Department of Housing and Community Development as part of the town's affordable housing inventory.

As with Cedarmere, the town-proposed project's conceptual plans show the affordable units not being integrated throughout the complex but mixed into the buildings containing rental apartments. The remainder of the project's units are condos.

It's not clear if the DHCD would count affordable units that are separate and different from others being proposed. The count is crucial because it would help Cohasset reach the 10 percent affordability threshold set by the state. Towns with less than 10 percent of their housing stock deemed affordable by state standards are vulnerable to "40-B projects" which can skirt most town regulations in exchange for providing affordable housing.

Plans are to combine the 22.4-acre Cook estate the adjacent 9.8-acre parcel the town owns near Stop & Shop and Red Fox Lane. The town will seek a developer to purchase the combined properties to develop an 87-unit, mixed-income senior housing community.

The Cook property is valued at $4.5 million; it is not clear how much the town's acreage would add to that figure. Selectmen said the town would set a minimum price in its Request for Proposals to cover the value of the combined parcels.

The purchase of the Cook property, which is subject to Town Meeting authorization, would be contingent on the town being able to find an acceptable buyer for the combined property, Haddad explained. If Town Meeting approves the purchase, selectmen expect to select a developer in January and have a simultaneous closing on both transactions in the middle of 2004.

Because of the simultaneous closings, the town would not spend any money to buy the Cook Estate and could stand to make a considerable sum on the sale of the town-owned 9.8-acre parcel.

The 87 units would consist of apartments and cluster houses, with a portion of the rental units being affordable for low-, moderate- and medium-income seniors. Access to the development would be off Sohier Street. The town will impose design controls and buffer requirements to protect adjacent properties.

Estimates are the tax revenue generated by the project, which would not add children to the schools, is about $300,000-$400,000 a year, Haddad said.

A three-acre parcel across Sohier Street (between the Mobil Station and Fair Oaks Lane), which is part of the Cook Estate, would be retained by the town and kept as open space.

There will be two articles pertaining to the Cook Estate on the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting warrant, Haddad explained. The first would ask Town Meeting to purchase the Cook property and the second would ask to dispose of the Cook property and the town-owned 9.8-acre parcel.

Contingencies will be built in to the RFP so if an acceptable buyer isn't found the deal doesn't go forward, Haddad said.

The town-owned 9.8-acre parcel has been eyed for senior housing for years but access was a problem. With the purchase of the Cook estate, access can be gained off Sohier Street.

tions on this side," said Moore, as the process continues.

Because the entire Cedarmere business plan is based on its being able to hook up to the sewer, David Calhoun, one of the developers said, "It would significantly impact the project," if they are denied access.

Without sewer access, the team would need to begin looking into building an on-site treatment system, potentially reducing the number of units, and making a reconfiguration of the buildings necessary to accommodate for the system. With new building plans, there would also be a need for new landscaping plans.

"If the answer is no, we'll go back to the drawing board," David Calhoun said.

It is also not clear if the state Department of Housing and Community Development will approve Cedarmere's affordable units, so they will count toward the town's affordable housing inventory. Apartments under the affordable component of Cedarmere would have to qualify as a state Local Initiative Project for the affordable units to "count." While developers insist the affordable housing units will "count," member Peter Pratt said he wasn't convinced they would.

"If someone had a bad day," it's possible they could take a look at the plans and deny them because the units are not invisibly integrated, he said.

Cohasset has less than 3 percent of its total housing stock deemed affordable by state standards and needs 10 percent to no longer be vulnerable to "40B projects" like AvalonBay's proposed 200-unit apartment complex off Rte. 3A that officials fear could impact the school population. Cedarmere is not a 40B project but is proposed under the town's Senior Overlay District, which town meeting voters passed to encourage more housing for senior citizens.

In the wake of Avalon, the largest 40B project ever proposed for the town, Planning Board members say abutters should be grateful Cedarmere developers have chosen to work with the town to build what it needs, rather than turn it into another 40B project.

"This land could be developed much more densely than proposed," said Moore, adding the developers could have chosen to build a 40B, but decided to work with the town to give them what they want.

"The DHCD doesn't have many towns calling up saying we're solving our own problems," David Calhoun said.

Alternatives 'ugly'

Planning Board member Robert Sturdy said the land could be developed into between 40 and 60 homes which could each have multiple children in the family. "The alternates are ugly," he said, adding he does not want to see either Cedarmere or the Cook Estate project turn into "Avalon two and Avalon three."

However, Judy Flint, 215 South Main St. said from listening to comments throughout the meeting, she got the impression abutters should get on board with the project because it's being shown as the best alternative to the situation. "We should be so relieved, God knows what else could come in," she said.

But the fact remains that the land has been bought and is a buildable piece of property, so whether Cedarmere goes in or not, something will be built on the site.

"Things like AvalonBay are inevitable," said Emily Brown, 30 Black Horse Lane, who said she fully supports the project. "I'd much rather have local people develop, who are sensitive to our concerns."

Jerome O'Callahan, 12 Sheldon Road said he too is in favor of the project and said he would be looking into moving to Cedarmere if it is built. He said he is currently looking to downsize and as of right now, may choose to move near family in Gloucester, but Cedarmere would provide the perfect alternative. "This is ideal as far as we're concerned."

David Keefe, 35 Stevens Lane, addressed concerns of abutters, as he too abuts a senior housing development. Keefe lives next door to the Harborview Apartments located on Elm Street and said he has no problem with the 64-unit complex in his neighborhood. "They're good neighbors. They have cars and they drive," and traffic near his home has not been affected, he said. "It's a good place to be."

But even with some support, most abutters will not be embracing the Cedarmere project any time soon.

"We do not exactly have our white knight," Flint said.

Historical Society celebrates 75 years in event-packed weekend

Showcases its new home

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The children's section is no longer home to Dr. Seuss, now that shelves which formerly held picture books contain precious historical artifacts. While there is still some unpacking to do, the transition from the Lothrop House to the Paul Pratt Memorial Building has been a smooth one for the Cohasset Historical Society, and will serve as the perfect venue to hold the Society's 75th anniversary celebration.

From Thursday Oct. 2 through Sunday Oct. 5, the Society will hold its "At the Edge of the Sea" anniversary celebration weekend. Visitors will be able to take a first glance at how the new space is becoming a home for so many of Cohasset's historical treasures.

"A good portion has been unpacked," said Lynne DeGiacomo, executive administrator for the Historical Society. However, because the building is undergoing construction to transform part of the downstairs into two apartments, as well as some restoration work, the artifacts will be safer in their boxes because of the debris.

But even with many relics still residing in storage, members are already anticipating a time when Cohasset's past can be showcased for the present generation. Co-president Paula Morse said one of the first purchases made for the new building were window treatments for the very large windows, because ultraviolet light from the sun, which includes direct and indirect light, can break down fibers in paper goods or textiles. Morse also said the building is climate-controlled, which helps with the preservation of the collection.

"Right now, anything we have is covered," to protect it from damage, she said.

The Historical Society has a "strong maritime history collection," said Morse, adding that because Cohasset served as a ship building and fishing community, many ship captains and crews lived in the area. "The collection reflects that," she said.

The Society also has a large array of costumes with "everything from ball gowns to military uniforms to wedding gowns," as well as children's outfits, and accessories such as fans, walking sticks, hats, shoes and umbrellas, said Morse. While some costumes will be on display for this weekend's celebration, a long-term plan for a display is still in the works.

"We have a wonderful collection and it deserves to be seen," she said, adding that she attended a textile workshop recently for just that purpose. Because the dresses have very intricate beading, which can be very heavy, and some are made of silk and other fragile fabrics, they need to be laid flat for display. Morse said she would like to have a display set up within the year, but will need money for adequate display cases before viewing could be made available for the public on a regular basis.

But even with some minor limitations, the Society has been working well around its current situation, and has already hosted a parasol exhibit for children, a textile exhibit, and a sign exhibit in the short time since the Paul Pratt Building was bought this spring. However, nothing to date will compare with what is planned for this weekend.

Thursday night, the Society will hold a sold-out reception featuring master of ceremonies Scott Wahle of WBZ 4 morning news and guest speaker Dr. Edward T. O'Donnell. A professor at Holy Cross, O'Donnell is a noted historian and author, and will speak about the Brig St. John, an Irish famine ship from Galway that crashed off the shore of Cohasset in 1849, which resulted in the worst shipwreck in Cohasset's history. There will also be a maritime art exhibit featuring painters W.K. Gilbert and Wilma Parker, as well as maritime selections from the Society's collection. The art exhibit will run through Nov. 14.

Friday, there will be a public opening from 6:30-9 p.m. U.S. Coast Guard Captain Cynthia Coogan, Chief of Operations at the First Coast Guard District, Boston, will speak on Revenue Cutters and the Coast Guard. Gilbert and Parker will hold a meet and greet with those who visit their artwork. Rik Tinory will also be on hand to celebrate the worldwide release and special edition CD of "Mother of Ireland," which he produced, and features a song he wrote about the Brig St. John, sung by actress/singer Stacy Rock. The CD, which includes a historic narration of the Brig St. John by James "Shamus" Mulligan, will be on sale for $19.99 with all proceeds going to the Cohasset Historical Society.

Saturday, the "At the Edge of the Sea" exhibit will be open from 2-4 p.m.

Sunday, the victims of the Brig St. John will be remembered from 10 a.m.-2 p.m., including a memorial mass at St. Anthony's Church on South Main Street at 1:00 p.m. Shamus Mulligan of WATD will conduct a live radio broadcast from the Pratt Building as well. The Cohasset High School singers will sing "Mother of Ireland" live under the direction of Brian Marks, Cohasset High School music director.

For everyone involved with the Historical Society, it is hoped this weekend will serve as a way to drum up more volunteer support by showing all the hard work members have put in and showing how important Cohasset's past is to its future. "We hope to get more people involved," said Morse.

With the exception of the opening reception, all events will be free of charge.

Pumpkins sale to raise money for ASP

Each year since 1988 a group of teens and adults from Cohasset has taken a one week trip to some of the poorest areas of this country to volunteer to do badly needed home repairs. The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project expects to send 120 teens and 55 or more adults on the next trip now being planned for June of 2004. This makes the Cohasset group the largest participant in the national Appalachia Service Project, coordinated out of Johnson City, Tenn.

All participants in the annual trip must also participate in the preparation for the trip. In addition to a series of workshops designed to prepare the teens and adults for the rigors of the trip, the group must raise the funds needed to make the trip possible. This year a new fundraising project has been added. The group plans to transform the open field at the entrance to Wheelwright Park on North Main Street in Cohasset into a Pumpkin Patch. The pumpkins are grown in a cooperative venture with the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and will be arriving in town on Wednesday, Oct. 8.

According to David Bigley, the volunteer Pumpkin Patch coordinator, "We are looking forward to providing a fun atmosphere for the whole family. We are creating a family friendly space where all ages are welcome to come and enjoy the fall tradition of picking out the family pumpkin." In addition to pumpkins of all sizes there will be other items such as Indian corn, decorative gourds, corn stalks, and lots more.

Plans are underway for Story Hours in The Patch, visits from "The Great Punkin", as well as many other exciting activities. The Patch will officially open on Saturday, Oct. 11, and will be open daily from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. through Halloween (Friday, Oct. 31).

respectively.

An additional bonus to hiring Alta Planning & Design is the relationship the town has built with the Waterfield Design Group through its work on the revitalization plans for the downtown area.

"They get along very well with the town," said Haddad.

The trail would run for 3-1/2 miles, be roughly six to 10 feet wide, and would run parallel to the tracks of the Greenbush line, encouraging physical activity by providing access to a safe trail for walkers and bikers. The trail would be separated from the rail bed by a secured fence to prohibit trespassing on the tracks. The trails could cut back on traffic by offering an alternative to driving to the train station, as well as promoting healthy lifestyles by encouraging exercise, the health board said.

Scituate resident and walking advocate, Mark Fenton, has been pursuing the same kind of trail system in his town. At the Scituate special town meeting Monday, voters appropriated $24,000 for its feasibility study. Fenton said Scituate will go through the same process as Cohasset, opening the bids up to all interested companies, then narrowing down the choices. However, because Cohasset has already chosen a company, Fenton said it will have an impact on Scituate's decision.

"If the two towns could get together, that would be great," he said, adding it will be much easier to negotiate with the MBTA if the two projects were run by the same company.

Alta Planning & Design will follow what the board calls a Scope of Work, which is a set of plans to help outline the process and ensure communication is kept open. The company is required to hold a kick-off meeting at the beginning of the project and provide ongoing coordination with the town from that point on. At the first meeting, key issues that may affect project feasibility will be identified, including potential trail users, trail design, right-of-way issues, and environmental permitting requirements. Key issues will be addressed through project research and coordination with town officials, the MBTA, and others, as appropriate.

Next, mapping of the area will begin. Orthophotos, or photographs of the area which are not affected by the camera angle and can therefore be measured just like a map, true to scale, will be arranged into a continuous file showing the entire corridor.

Once mapping of the area is complete, the field area will be reviewed, including roadway alternatives and traffic at intersections. Following the field study, a public meeting will be held with town officials to analyze the alternatives.

Within five months of receiving a written "Notice to Proceed" from the town, a draft feasibility study report must be completed. A final feasibility study report will be completed within 10 days of receiving draft report edits.

Salt marsh restoration team recognized

The Damde Meadows Salt Marsh Restoration Team has been selected to receive a 2003 Coastal America Spirit Award and The Trustees of Reservations has been selected to receive a 2003 Special Recognition Award from Coastal America for their partnership effort in restoring and protecting the coastal environment at World's End in Hingham.

The ambitious project, completed in early March 2003, has successfully restored tidal flows to Damde Meadows. Once a salt marsh, Damde Meadows was reclaimed for agricultural uses more than 300 years ago by European settlers. The restoration effort involved the installation of a concrete box culvert in each of the two dikes near Martins Cove. Once in place, the culverts allowed tidal waters from Martins Cove to flood the 14-acre pond. Restoring daily tides to the brackish pond was the first step in converting the biologically impoverished environment of Damde Meadows to a thriving salt marsh ecosystem that is critical to preserving the coastal environment.

"Although no salt marsh has taken hold in the large pond, tidal inundation has significantly affected the growth of Phragmites, a highly invasive plant that had usurped much of the pond's botanical diversity," says Andy Walsh, Southeast Regional Ecologist at The Trustees of Reservations. "In the years ahead, we'll see more changes at Damde Meadows as the system adjusts." Walsh will continue to monitor environmental changes at the site for years to come. The Trustees and its partners hope that the studies will inform future salt marsh restoration projects.

American businessman and Cohasset resident Bill Allard, president and CEO of Marquis Jet, "holed-in-one" twice at the Dunhill Links, a PGA European pro-am golf tournament that took place last weekend in Scotland. Allard shot his first hole-in-one with a 7-iron from 165 yards on the second hole at Kingsbarns in his practice round; he shot his second on the 157 yard-eighth hole at Carnoustie in his first round. One of the world's most prestigious pro-am golf tournaments, the Dunhill Links Championship is played over three of Scotland's top courses: The Old Course at St. Andrew's, Carnoustie and Kingsbarns. The tournament concluded Sunday, Sept. 28. Bill played with Wales professional David Park. Bill has never had a hole in one before in 15 years of playing golf. "When I phoned home to tell them about it, no one believed me," Bill said. A lifelong sports enthusiast, Bill joined Marquis Jet as president and CEO after heading up SFX Sports Group, a sports management and marketing firm.

YOUNG AUTHORS WORKSHOP

A great new concept for kids opens next week. The Studio Sea "young authors workshop" has begun enrollment. Using technology and crafting, kids design, author and produce their very own hardcover books. The technology teacher at Osgood School, Derry Schwantner, is running the workshops for kids grades one through six. The studio is located in the village on South Main Street. For further information and signups, please call Studio Sea at 781-383-6994.

My daughter Callie, along with so many talented and creative students took part in a two week pilot program at the end of the summer with Derry and the end results were amazing. Here is a place outside of school where kids can work together or on their own and really show their creativity, thoughts and ideas in a beautiful hardcover book that they make from beginning to end. With the patience, enthusiasm and love of creations and books that Derry shares with the children, this program is "bound" to be a huge success! Make sure to stop in and visit or give Derry a call to find out more about this fantastic new business!

PROJECT SAFEGUARD

Attention to all parents of seventh-grade students! Please save Monday, Oct. 27 in your calendar to come and take part in the annual Project Safeguard event. All parents are strongly encouraged to attend with their 7th grade students. This is a half day event, followed by a parent luncheon and is very worthwhile to attend. The committee would also like to thank the hole sponsors: Betsy Hines Realtors, Marshfield, Conlon Chiropractic, Marty O'Toole & Sons Painting, The Mariner Newspapers, Professional Homemakers, Scituate Federal Savings Bank, South Coastal Bank, South Shore Signs, and the UPS Store, Cohasset.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley and his daughter Amanda congratulate Cohasset's Amanda Thompson on her first novel "Millennium Girl" during a book signing at Buttonwood Books.

Mystery authors and tasty desserts

On Tuesday, Oct. 21, the Hingham Public Library and Buttonwood Books of Cohasset will present a special literary event at the library. The "Daggers and Desserts" evening will feature three top-notch mystery authors discussing their latest works, as well as a buffet of criminally delicious desserts

Featured authors will be Bill Eidson, Michelle Blake, and Tom Eslick. Eidson's latest, "The Repo," is characterized by the same hard-edged, fast-paced, and relentless suspense which have earned his earlier books a devoted following.

Michelle Blake's "Book of Light" is the third in her series featuring Episcopal priest and sometime sleuth Lily Connor, a Texas native transplanted to Boston. Like the two previous mysteries featuring Lily, this work is both suspenseful and thought-provoking, tackling issues beyond the range of standard cloak-and-dagger stories.

Tom Eslick sets his Will Buchanan mysteries at a New Hampshire boarding school where the protagonist works as a science teacher. "Deadly Kin" is the latest in the series. It combines heart-stopping suspense, a strong plot line, and a superbly rendered setting in the treacherous and beautiful mountain country of northern New England.

"Daggers and Desserts" begins at 7 p.m. in the Hingham Public Library's Whiton Room. There is no admission charge for this event, but you may be tempted not only to sample a selection of utterly decadent desserts but also to purchase one or more of these authors' enticing new books.

Please call the library reference desk to reserve your place: 781-741-1405, ext. 2608.

Clarify the sewer issue

The "Sewer Issue" has been around Cohasset for a long time. Legal fees incurred over decades had tallied into the hundreds of thousands of dollars as the town tried to reach a pact with the state in the mid-90s. The efforts attempted to solve Cohasset's wastewater woes and get it out from under the threat of hefty fines and litigation for not doing so.

The establishment of the North Cohasset Sewer District and the expansion of the Central Sewer District were the subjects of lively town meeting votes after several public forums that included excruciatingly detailed handouts explaining what streets were involved and the cost to homeowners and taxpayers.

We also recall the days when irate homeowners with percolating septic systems that had broken out onto the surface — but whose houses were just outside the district — begged the Sewer Commission for access to the sewer system, only to be told it was a "capacity issue."

While most of those homes have now connected, others with failing septic systems are waiting in line for capacity at a treatment plant, which has an expensive, state-of-the-art system that took years to design.

Today from where we sit, the capacity issue appears to be no longer as clear-cut. There seem to be conflicting messages about whether new developments can tie in before other areas in town.

We don't think the Sewer Commission is necessarily sending the mixed signals — but it is not sending the clear signal that it did in years past when talking with the small group of Mendel Road or Newtonville neighbors, who were seeking connections, that they would have to "wait and see."

Here are the questions that are surfacing:

Can private developers have their own engineers get involved in determining capacity or a potential plant expansion?

If Cedarmere gets permission to hook up, what does that mean for existing homes that aren't connected?

Does Avalon have first dibs on the capacity that Cedarmere is seeking? What about the new senior complex proposed for the Cook Estate? What if an on-site system won't work there?

What kind of legal trouble is the town getting itself into if it allows one development to hook up and not another? Can the town be accused of discriminating against Avalon – whose feet are being held to the fire over an on-site system that could end up being a project-breaker – for telling Avalon it couldn't hook up to the sewer?

Do "senior housing" projects get favorable treatment for sewer connections because they fill a housing need in the community?

What about Little Harbor?

Is Town Meeting approval needed before homes outside the district can hook up?

Town Counsel met with selectmen and the Sewer Commission yesterday in executive session to go over some of these issues and how they might affect the court order the town is under, dubbed the Second Amended Agreement for Judgment.

The stakes couldn't be higher. Developers with millions of dollars at risk are eyeing Cohasset's sewer capacity.

The taxpayers need a clear explanation. A public forum on the future of the Cohasset Sewer System is in order.

Greenbush is Doug Foy's folly

To the Editor:

The Governor's announcement last week in support of the Greenbush restoration was unwelcome news for those of us who have long opposed the project.

It is a terrible turn of events given that Sen. Hedlund had finally gotten the Governor's attention so he and Rep. Garrett Bradley could emphasize how deeply opposed residents of Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate are to the project. The Governor also found the case for the alternatives presented by AfTA president John Bewick so compelling that he held off making a decision until the alternatives could be properly evaluated. The details of what happened next may never be known, but the fingerprints of Romney's transportation and environmental czar Doug Foy seem to be all over the decision to move ahead without one mention of objective criteria. In fact the announcement was replete with the same mantras of past administrations, i.e. does anyone really believe the coastal communities of the South Shore need economic development?

Prior to becoming an advisor to Governor Romney, Foy was head of the Conservation Law Foundation, and an ardent proponent of the Greenbush restoration. Given his history with the project, he was hardly the best person to objectively review the alternatives to Greenbush. One can imagine his delight, when the Governor, with his plate already full of controversial issues, turned to him and said, "You handle this one, Doug."

Whenever confronted by Greenbush negatives, Foy falls back on the so-called "hundred year view," which, simply stated, means that, while the project0s negative points may loom large today, 100 years from now, the Greenbush restoration will be seen as a good decision.

As Andy Rooney would say, "I don't know about you, but I have a hard time with that argument." First and foremost, if you happen to be in the position of power that Foy is in, it's a blank check for making virtually any decision you want to make. Who, after all, is going to be around a 100 years from now to question the wisdom of the decision.

Ironically, looking back in time, there was a Greenbush-related decision made in 1849, well over 100 years ago that flies in the face of Foy's logic. It was the decision to build the rail line in the first place. For those familiar with Hingham history, the decision was the result of so-called politically motivated midnight legislation, it was an unpopular decision then and 150 years later its restoration remains highly controversial for many of the same reasons.

Foy will also point out that urban planners have to take the 50,000-foot view if anything is ever to get done. But historic districts are hard to appreciate from such a lofty perch. One's appreciation can only take place at ground level and 24 double-decked diesel locomotives a day running through the heart of Hingham's Lincoln National Register Historic District is not exactly what the Department of the Interior had in mind when it established the district in 1990. Bennet Heart, a Conservation Law Foundation lawyer, who spoke in favor of Greenbush at a past Army Corps hearing, confirmed this CLF disconnect when he admitted he had never been to Hingham. He was formally invited, but declined the invitation. Perhaps he didn't want to know.

HEALTH NOTES

Rails with Trails to get us walking

Some time ago, the Board of Health decided that the two best aids to health and longevity (which, being 74, I think about a lot) are diet and exercise. It's clear that America has an obesity problem. I liken it to smoking when it became apparent that cigarettes were a killer. We now know that too much of the wrong food can be just as deadly as smoking. The statistics are similar.

The other problem with having more than we need is that we get lazy. We never walk when we can drive. There are other problems such as the fact that, when boating, we never row when, with a few bucks, we can buy an outboard. But the driving thing has caused us to develop an industry which caters to the comfort of the car. The town regulations about the number of parking spaces for commercial and industrial sites call for unnecessarily enormous parking requirements for cars. New subdivisions are routinely granted waivers for Town regulations thus eliminating sidewalks. I suppose the recent bump-out regulations were supposed to benefit cars; they certainly didn't benefit people. So, the Board of Health has decided to try to help improve the walkability of Cohasset.

One part of this campaign is to support Mark Fenton of Scituate in his crusade to have a "rails with trails" (RWT) corridor from Weymouth to Greenbush. This week, the Town will release a contract to Alta Planning + Design, the Waterfield Design Group, and the Rails to Trails Conservancy to study the feasibility of a corridor along the 3.5 mile right of way to be used by the Greenbush MBTA line from Hingham to Scituate. Scituate, by the way, voted on its section of the rail with trail Monday.

The MBTA is known to be generally opposed to using the right of way for pedestrian traffic, because the state requires them to assume total liability for any accident on their property

The feasibility study is a necessary first step in obtaining a 90 percent grant from the Federal Department of Transportation (DOT) to fund building the bike and pedestrian path. The consortium doing the work on this project is also the one doing the work with the MBTA on coordinating the entire rail line in Cohasset. The MBTA is known to be generally opposed to using the right of way for pedestrian traffic, because the state requires them to assume total liability for any accident on their property. Of course, some parts of the corridor represent almost no risk, and others more. A report, prepared for the DOT by Alta, called "Rails With Trails, Lessons Learned" identifies a range of options that can reduce liability exposure, including State statutes; property acquisition; easement, license, and indemnification agreements; and liability insurance provision by the trail management entity.

The Alta group will see where walking and biking near the right of way represents no risk to those doing it. Paul Smith of Alta has walked the full corridor from Greenbush to the Cohasset/Hingham line). The ultimate purpose of the Board on this project is to enhance the ability of people to use bikes, roller blades or walking from one destination to others in town, so we are interested in developing ways of enhancing connectivity. Alta, and its colleagues have adopted the concept that the feasibility study will represent a pattern for the entire town to use in connecting its existing walkways and paths to enhance pedestrian communication all over town.

No national standards or guidelines dictate RWT facility design., and we will, in a sense, be breaking new ground in beginning an effort that will take 10 or more years to complete if it's ever really complete. In the end, the vision is to gradually make walking and biking so much more attractive than getting in your car and driving, that everyone will begin doing it. The exercise will do us all good.

Saving town land from development is worthy goal

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

"I want to do right, but not right now." — song lyric by Gillian Welch.

Do you ever wonder how it can be that so many of us know about the damage we're doing to Earth, yet we change our behavior not one iota? Think about it. We're supposedly homo sapiens, intelligent beings. Yet we're driving our cars around dumping tailpipe toxics into the very air we breathe. What sort of intelligent being poisons itself?

An intelligent being whose knowledge is out of synch with her beliefs. While our left-brain tells us it determines our behavior based on knowledge, don't you trust it. That's just left-brain spin; monkeymind chatter. It is our beliefs that create our behavior; the veneer of knowledge gets applied second, if it supports the behavior. If the knowledge conflicts with the belief, the knowledge is simply ignored.

Let me give an example. The residents of Cohasset own a parcel of land located behind Stop & Shop. It's not a vacant lot. It contains abundant Life, Living Beings all — soil, water, air, sunlight, bacteria, fungi, plants, 100-year-old trees, profuse and beautiful wildlife. Schoolchildren understand natural living systems like this allow humans to exist on Earth and offer joy and ecstasy. The plants absorb carbon dioxide and give off oxygen; the soil purifies the water, the wildlife connects us to Life's mystery. We know too much of Earth's natural systems have already been destroyed. It would be insanity to destroy the natural systems on this parcel. This is the knowledge we possess about the parcel.

An article will be presented at the upcoming Town Meeting that proposes to sell the parcel to a developer, who would build a senior housing project there. How can this be?

It's because of the prevailing beliefs about the parcel. This we believe:

Anyone who owns land in Cohasset has the right to develop it. Humans are meant to develop natural land into housing projects. Undeveloped land is vacant and not the highest and best use. Covering Earth with asphalt and buildings does no harm. If the Town doesn't develop this parcel, someone else will. If we develop it we can be in control. All developable land in Cohasset can be developed and Earth will not end. Life will go on as usual. No one will even notice anything different. The project won't hurt the air, water, or soil. Future generations will thank us for replacing the woodland ecosystem with a senior housing project. Residents of the project can rely on fossil fuels for heating the homes, generating electricity, and fueling their cars. It isn't necessary to worry about energy efficiency or sustainability. The world is not going to run out of oil or land to develop.

Earth itself has no rights. We don't really need to have any connection with nature. God wants humans to develop the Earth. That's what it's here for. It's for us. Nothing can be done to protect unbuilt land unless preservationists can buy it. None of the living beings on the parcel have any legal rights or standing. Humans have the right to destroy them at any time.

It is good to separate things by simplistic type. For example, only residences in a residential zone, only businesses in a business zone, only grass on the lawn, only seniors in this project. It's better to put all the old people in one place. Nature's evolution of rich diversity is a concept that does not apply to Cohasset. The legal system, economic system, and religions, which control our beliefs and this parcel, cannot be altered toward sustainability. We are helpless victims of our own creations. There are no other options available to us. It's not my responsibility to do anything about what's happening to Earth. It's someone else's responsibility. The Selectmen and Senior Housing Committee know what's best for the future of Cohasset residents.

I'd like to think that any reader who carefully considers each of the above beliefs would conclude each belief is false and harmful. We can change our beliefs. Step one is becoming aware of them. Look at your beliefs. Let them change.

It won't be easy. Many of us were taught our beliefs by our parents, teachers, and clergy, and the belief was unconsciously coupled with strong emotion. We have a loyalty to our beliefs, even when some are clearly no longer working to support our own life.

100-year-old trees on parcel owned by the residents of Cohasset.

Our legal, economic, educational and religious structures embody these beliefs and won't be easy to evolve. I certainly don't have any easy answers. But we must evolve these structures, since they are guiding Cohasset's future not toward sustainability but toward unsustainable sprawl. I can't do much about the Amazon rainforest, or the California redwoods, but I can speak out here in Cohasset, to encourage us to at least begin walking the path of sustainability. We need to find ways to discard the beliefs that are Earth-destroying, and replace them with Earth-sustaining beliefs.

Playing fields to political arena

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I read once that Abe Lincoln was playing baseball when the delegation from the Republican National Committee came to Springfield to let him know that the party had nominated him for president of the United States.

"Tell them," he said, "to wait until I get another base hit."

Abe must have rattled the next fast ball off the left field wall because the required three sources tell me that he spent the next four years in the White House and may have stayed longer if Mrs. Lincoln hadn't insisted on seeing that play down at Ford's.

If the story is true — and I'm sure it isn't — it would make Honest Abe the first athlete to become president of the United States, unless you want to count John Quincy Adams' late night bollicky swims in the Potomac as competitive.

In case you wonder why I tell you this, it's because Martina Navratilova, the girl tennis player, is thinking of going into politics when she retires after the 2004 doubles season, which takes her out of the Democratic race for president, I suppose.

Athletes retiring from the playing fields and showing up in the political arena is nothing new, dating back to the middle of the 19th century.

"If Arnold Schwarzenegger can run for governor of California, then who knows?" said Martina, sports' best known lesbian. "I have muscles. I will be involved, especially the way things are going. The conservative party is too strong."

Wouldn't it be a hoot if the Czech-born Martina were to run for governor of California against the Austrian Arnold and the Greek Arianna and they all threw their accents into the mix to debate economics? On second thought, we have our home-grown Tom Menino.

Athletes retiring from the playing fields and showing up in the political arena is nothing new, dating back to the middle of the 19th century.

John Morrissey, a member of the boxing hall of fame, won the American heavyweight championship by knocking out John Heenan in 11 rounds in 1858. Then he retired to run gambling houses in Saratoga, N.Y. and serve two terms in Congress.

Ed King starred at football at Boston College, then played professionally with the Buffalo Bills and the Baltimore Colts before becoming governor of Massachusetts in 1979. He was with the Bills when they were wrecked by the Cleveland Browns in the 1948 All American Football Conference championship game.

Jack Kennedy was an end of the freshman and junior varsity teams at Harvard and brother Ted actually scored a touchdown against Yale in The Game in 1955 and eight years later Ted was a U. S. senator, although it is doubtful his athletic prowess played a role in his election.

The most athletic president was probably Gerald Ford, who was a center at the University of Michigan and played for the College All Stars against the Chicago Bears in his senior year. He turned down contract offers from the Detroit Lions and the Green Bay Packers.

One of the senators from Kentucky right now is Jim Bunning, a member of the baseball hall of fame, who pitched two no-hitters during his 15-year career and is recalled as the only pitcher who ever struck out Ted Williams three times in one game.

I'm not going to tell you his party affiliation but he once called Bill Clinton "the most corrupt, most amoral, the most despicable person I've ever seen in the presidency!"

Greenbush delays are a necessary expense

LOCAL VIEW

OVE PYGH WILCHE

SEQ CHAPTER \h \r 1When Governor Romney signed off, his administration became the fifth in 20 years to give the Greenbush project a go. This may cause some to believe everything is set, but do not be mislead. Only the political hurdle is cleared. Missing permits, unsettled safety measures, and unresolved mitigation issues still plague the project. Nevertheless, the MBTA still claims the price tag is $479 million. This is hard to believe. The Greenbush project has a track record of delays and increasing price tags and everything considered, we should expect this to continue.

Proponents have argued that the opposition has caused all the delays and thus the rise in expenditure. As an opponent, I am proud to say there is some truth to this. However, it is only partly true and I think this is the time to set the record straight.

When the MBTA began construction, all they had was the intent to revive the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad. They never had, do not yet have, and mostly likely will never have a master plan for the construction before the project is completed. Had the project gone through as originally proposed, we would have faced a discount railroad built at extremely low cost. In addition, it would also be an artifact from an era that ended five decades ago. In short, the original proposal included no modern standards at all.

This is where the opponents have had an impact. Had the Town of Hingham not stood firm, the train would have run at grade level through the Square. Unfortunately, the settlement was not "costly enough". We did not get the long tunnel. Also, we were left with too little money for any serious mitigation other than the short tunnel. Nevertheless, Hingham set an example and other towns stood to benefit from it.

One of the most serious problems in this project has always been the high number of grade crossings. The Greenbush Line is only 17.7 miles long, but has a record high 43 grade crossings. Opponents have "whined, harped, and griped" about this for decades and we did it so successfully that the MBTA "has found" ways to eliminate 20 of the original 43 grade crossings. The perfect world is, of course, a railroad without such crossings, but a reduction to almost half is a good start and worth the cost.

Along the line (no pun intended) the opponents "cajoled, cried, and kicked" so much that each delay was concluded with some kind of improvement in design and, of course, increased cost. Amazingly, the legislature has always accepted these increases of the final price tag. Then again, they still back the Big Dig, so what can we expect? The reality is that the MBTA has always withheld important information and not included all costs when making the final price tag public.

One example is the installation of four-quad gates. This safety measure was high-tech four decades ago, but if we really have to live with grade crossings it is the least we would expect from a railroad constructed in the new millennium. So we are, again, dealing with one of the issues where the opponents rang the bells and blew the whistles (pun intended) to get the best possible safety measures. Nevertheless, the MBTA has not decided yet and the cost of these is therefore, as so many other things, not included in the current price tag.

No matter how we look at this project, it is important that the opponents continue their good work. On both sides of the fence we can only have an interest in the best possible (and not just the cheapest) solution to the many problems related to this project. Our goals are, of course, different. The proponents want the train and the opponents do not want it. However, if opponents have to cave in to the coming of the train, proponents should accept the delays and the necessary expense. After all, what we all want is a safe means of public transportation, no matter the chosen alternative.

If there is an appropriate long-term view in all this, it is the 368-year view, which happens to be precisely the age of the town of Hingham. No doubt town leaders over this span of time have been confronted many times with issues that would have impacted Hingham's historical integrity. As a result of their diligence, Hingham remains one of the historical treasures of the Commonwealth.

But not for long, if Doug Foy has his way.

If anyone doubts the impact these trains and their treeless, fenced in corridor will have on our town they need only visit one of the other Old Colony lines and stand 15-20 feet from the track, or roughly the distance many homes in Hingham would be from the rail line. They are big and ugly and there is no justification for running them through the heart of a historic district as pristine as the one we enjoy in Hingham. Tunnel or no tunnel, Hingham will never again be the same if the line is built. No amount of mass transit ridership is worth it and as long as there are viable alternatives, and a glimmer of hope, we need to continue to fight for our town.

Doug Foy will contend that future generations will thank us for Greenbush. I contend that, if the line is built, future generations in Hingham will ask why we ever let it happen.

Train numbers and bump-outs

TO THE EDITOR:

An article in Thursday's Cohasset Mariner (9/25) states that the Greenbush train will allow for 76,000 trips per day. That's a lot of trains! The figure comes in a sentence that refers to the vehicle miles per day saved by train usage, so it is perhaps a simple error. However, as your editorial so clearly states your preference for the train, it is imperative that your paper not mislead the readership with figures that are more than nine times the truth. The Patriot Ledger (9/23/03, pg. 1) reports MBTA officials estimate 76,000 vehicle miles per day will be saved. The Boston Globe (Ralph Lewis, Gobe Staff, 9/23/03) reports an estimated 8,600 trips per day are expected. We are left to assume that's one way, so 4,300 riders' round trips will be expected.

As for the fiscal logic, at an estimated cost of 439 million dollars, that's 100,000 dollars per person. That's a lot of boat by the way, with no grade crossings, and no black soot and diesel exhaust added to our onshore air quality problems.

I would also like your paper, in the interest of fairness, to request and encourage the selectmen, as they did for the proposed "bump-outs", to make the MBTA Mitigation officials put those same yellow bungie-corded traffic sticks up for those grade crossing areas where the "median strips, 60-100 feet in length" will be needed. We deserve, and our fire, health, and safety protection teams deserve, a test period to see exactly how inconvenient, ugly, and ultimately unsafe these jersey barrier median strips will be.

Romney stands to win even if death penalty bid fails

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Gov. Romney announced formation of a death penalty commission that could produce fascinating results, of all kinds, including a political win for the governor even if the effort to reinstate the death penalty fails.

Romney named 11 forensic experts and well-known jurists to the Governor's Council on Capital Punishment. It will meet six times between now and Dec. 31. Its final report will pass judgment on whether it's possible to set up a capital punishment system under which no one innocent could be executed.

There are several ways the new council might add to Romney's public standing even if he fails to win the votes in the Legislature to reinstate capital punishment, or if the council decides there's no "incontrovertible" system of guilt determination, to use the word the governor did. An honest search for difficult answers, properly conducted, in some ways would impress the public even more if it fails to end in the answer the governor wants. A good-faith effort that results in a negative conclusion would enable Romney to retreat from the subject while still looking like a strong leader. And if the council concludes an incontrovertible system is possible, but the Legislature rejects it, Romney will have another card to play in his escalating conflict with the Democratically-controlled House and Senate.

There are still at least two hurdles in front of any Romney death penalty bill. Both are immense. First – and this is typically the case with the Romney agenda – he lacks the votes when push comes to shove. It's not as much a Democratic/Republican issue as many others are, but the fact is the Legislature is turning away from the death penalty, not towards it. Second, Romney may literally be asking for the impossible. If he insists on flawless science, he'll have nowhere to go if his own council pronounces perfection unattainable — and many constituents will wonder why he asked for it. Some in the House think it's all politics to begin with — that the governor simply wants to make the Democrats look squishy.

And finally, there's the ultimate objection to the death penalty — one that science will never be able to address. That's the contention that, even if it could be perfectly applied, capital punishment is immoral because no government has the right to take away someone's life. That line of thinking could trump all the science the best and brightest could muster; in a democracy, instinct often overrides logic. But it's worth remembering that's not the logic, nor instinct, John Slattery cited when he remarkably switched his tie-breaking vote on capital punishment in 1997. Slattery didn't say he thought capital punishment was morally wrong per se. What he said was, to quote the News Service summary, "I don't want to be the one lying in bed some night wondering if the wrong person is being put to death. I just worry that the wrong person could be sentenced. It is for that reason I am changing my vote."

And it is for that reason that Romney is trying this fascinating new approach.

While jurists pondered the profundities of life and death, thousands of poor Massachusetts residents found themselves faced with a more immediate crisis – and many probably still don't know it's an issue.

•Medicaid will have waiting list under Romney savings plans — In what officials said is a strategy to avoid benefit cuts, Romney's health and human services managers intend to cap enrollment in three plans that deliver health services to the poor. Recipients will be turned away from CommonHealth once it hits 11,850, which it's expected to do in November. They will be barred from Family Assistance once enrollment passes 5,370 participants. And MassHealth Essential, the program intended to replace health benefits for long-term unemployed people displaced from the rolls last winter, will be capped at 36,000. Prospective clients will have to wait for someone else to move off the rolls before they can move on. Advocates criticized the move, calling it unprecedented, but administration officials said it's better than cutting services for all enrollees.

•Greenbush will go forward —, The administration and MBTA board said construction will now resume on the $479 million Greenbush commuter rail line along the South Shore. The project has long been delayed by quality of life, environmental and financial concerns. Some environmentalists cheered the move, but officials in Fall River and New Bedford question why there's no money to bring the trains to their struggling cities. T officials said the project is needed to help the economy and ease daily traffic snarls.

•One-year cap budget for transportation in offing — Administration officials announced for now, while they continue an ambitious review of all authorized state capital spending, they will opt for an unusual one-year capital spending agenda. "We want to assure that we're getting our priorities right and the best bang for our buck," A&F's Director of Capital Planning Timothy Murphy told the House Committee on Long-Term Debt and Capital Expenditures. "If a shovel is in the ground, we will not stop that project. It will go forward." The Legislature over the years has authorized many more projects than the state can afford under its annual bond cap and there's considerable angst in the building over the prospect of those projects getting axed.

• Electric grid official: costs of upgrade offset by cheaper power buys — Attorney General Thomas Reilly continued to charge electric companies are using the August blackout to justify reorganization plans and transmission investments that will reduce industry accountability, and raise consumer prices. But Stephen Whitley, vice president of Independent System Operator - New England, the regional electric grid operator said new regional transmission schemes will lead to a system that will enable grid operators to tap the cheapest power sources.

• Romney extends leases on military reservations — The governor called facilities such as Camp Edwards on Cape Cod vital to the state's security efforts. He said the leases he signed extending to 2051 include environmental protections – a key issue on Cape Cod, where a plume of contaminants from Edwards over the Cape's only aquifer has long been a source of contention and anxiety. Romney said the military training base is a key part of the local economy.

• Rodrigues: new UI bill coming within two weeks — Speaking to the declining balance — and the growing crisis — in the Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund, Gov. Romney said, "We're in serious risk of not being able to meet our obligations there." With the latest unemployment rate in Massachusetts up to 5.8 percent, Commerce and Labor Committee chairman Michael Rodrigues, D-Westport, assured the News Service his committee will release, within two weeks, an "all encompassing" and "comprehensive" bill that integrates ideas suggested by the business community, the administration, and his colleagues in the Legislature. The many dependent on the system's stability are hoping lawmakers won't wait until the fund is out of money to take action.

• Grocery stores would like to remove individual stickers — With other kinds of retail stores now cleared to move to a sticker-less unit pricing system, grocery industry representatives told the Commerce and Labor Committee the time has arrived to bring the new system to their shelves. Some consumer advocates and labor representatives said the proposal would result in layoffs, pricing mistakes and confusion.

• Senate passes anti-spam bill — There are 7 billion pieces of commercial e-mail, the official moniker for spam, delivered every day in the United States, according to sponsors of legislation designed to free inboxes of the annoying and potentially virus-carrying deliveries. Unlike California's effort to ban spam, the Senate-passed bill requires the prefixes ADV and ADLT on advertising or adult/pornographic emails. The idea is to allow individual computer users to then activate filter options to block the receipt of spam.

• State Retirement Board rejects Bulger brothers' pension requests — Bids by former UMass President William Bulger to enhance his $200,000-a-year pension by $32,000 and his convicted brother John "Jackie" Bulger to receive his $64,000 annual pension were denied by the State Retirement Board. William Bulger recently resigned amidst criticism of his ability to lead the university while not fully cooperating with authorities seeking his most-wanted brother James "Whitey" Bulger. Jackie Bulger has been convicted of perjury and obstruction of justice.

No match for iron

CHS golfers must now win all five remaining matches to make playoffs

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

The Skippers golf squad now stands at 3-7-1 with five matches left. Can the boys keep their confidence and finish with a .500 record to make the state tournament? They must win all five of the final matches to qualify.

This past week the Skippers encountered the most rugged part of their schedule, Abington and Harwich back-to-back.

In a near upset, Cohasset fell Thursday to league favorite, Abington, 28-26, at Strawberry Valley under very windy conditions. Despite the loss, the match-up helped buttress the Cohasset team's confidence. Senior Mike Devine shot an outstanding round of 37. Freshman Kevin Barber, from the number one spot, fired a very respectable 38. Both players marched on to win their matches, 5-4.

Barber and Devine weren't the only players to bring Cohasset within striking distance of second place Abington. Senior Mike Hajjar, in his sixth year at the game, also ended with an exceptional 37 while Jack Carroll shot a solid 40. Tim Pilczak and Ricky Lordan both fired a score of 36, an incredible tally for a par 34 course.

"We knew ahead of time the Abington course was a short one," reflected Coach Torin Sweeney. "So the day before our match we practiced exclusively with irons. This strategy definitely paid off."

The Skippers' luck vanished the following Monday when they slipped further down the loss column, this time to Harwich. The Harwich team sailed past the Skippers by a score of 32-22 in moderate winds at Cranberry Valley, a beautiful Cape course. In what was definitely an "off" day, few Cohasset players scored below 40.

"This proved a tough day for us," observed freshman Kevin Barber. "We put in a good effort. The results just weren't what we had hoped for."

On Tuesday, the Skippers tied Mashpee, 27-27, at the Cohasset Golf Club.

Devine won out of the second spot, 5-4, Pilczak out of the third, 6.5-2.5 and Colin Magruder out of the sixth spot, 5-4.

Though they didn't win straight up, big points were also provided by Barber (3-6), Carroll (3.5-5.5) and Hajjar (4-5).

Norwell boys roll over Cohasset to seize control in SSL title chase

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It seemed every meeting between the Norwell and Cohasset High boys soccer teams in recent years has been a classic battle that, in the end, left the two teams separated by the narrowest of margins, both on the scoreboard and in the opinion of the majority of observers.

Please note again the use of the word "seemed".

With six unanswered second half goals, this past Thursday night under the light at Cohasset High, the visiting Clippers coasted to a 7-1 win over a stunned Skippers team and an equally stunned partisan crowd, and may well have sewn themselves up a second straight South Shore League crown in the process.

Needless to say, this was hardly what was expected after Norwell had barely edged Cohasset at home, 3-2, just 12 days previous.

A pretty tally by Rob Beach, redirecting a cross out of the air from Andrew Olsen on a near post run 12 minutes into the second half, opened the floodgates on an unexpected offensive explosion from visiting Norwell.

"I think Cohasset took us out

'BYE' the way

CHS gridders eye Cardinal Spellman showdown next Saturday

After a Bye week, the 2-0 Cohasset Skippers resume their 2003 schedule with an away game this Saturday (1:30 PM) at Cardinal Spellman High School. Spellman is coming off a 27-7 defeat at the hands of the Hingham High Harbormen this past Saturday and their record now stands at 1-2.

Spellman previously played fellow South Shore League member Norwell two weeks ago, and was edged 7-6, as their two point conversion attempt for the lead and ultimately the win failed.

Cohasset romped over Spellman at home last year, 31-0, and prevailed in a 7-6 game on their last visit to Cardinal Spellman's home field in 2001. Spellman is a predominately run-oriented team that likes to eat up the clock.

Cohasset's offense is averaging 20-1/2 points a game, and has shown the capability to gain ground through the air as well as a potent run assault. And has a defensive corps that is always

Field hockey team reaches .500 mark with 5-0 win over Hull

By William Wassersug
CORRESPONDENT

With a 5-0 win over Hull Monday, the Cohasset field hockey team improved on what's already been a good season.

"It was impressive," Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick said about the win. "It was 3-0 at the half, and at halftime they (Hull) didn't cross the 50 more than twice."

Courtney Caron notched a hat trick for Cohasset, scoring twice in the first half and again in the second half before Bostwick moved her out of her usual forward position.

"Hull's 16 was beating up Courtney," Bostwick said. "Their defense was very aggressive and intense. They had some strong girls. After she scored her third, I moved Courtney to save her."

After six games, Cohasset is 3-3.

Bostwick said Caron is a big part of the success.

"She has speed and her dodging skills are coming around. She can drive like a bullet. Today, she had missed a breakaway early. Then later she had another chance. She took a shot and the goalie made the save but muffed it. Courtney dove for it and pushed it through her pads."

Caron scored Cohasset's first goal unassisted after knocking home a rebound on a Hull save.

For her second goal that gave Cohasset a 2-0 lead, Caron got a perfect pass from Danielle Pinkus on a run up the left side and knocked it in.

Carling Sturino set up the play.

"Carling cleared the ball to the left side after she intercepted it at the 25," Bostwick said. "She passed it to Danielle and Danielle got it to Courtney."

Bostwick said Sturino had a superb game.

"It was her best game ever."

Norwell girls give Lady Skippers the boot again

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

The difference between the two games may have been only one goal, but the difference in effort and performance could not be measured by a scoreboard.

Last Thursday, the members of the Cohasset girls soccer team played a tough, determined contest against Norwell. They were simply beaten by a more talented team, 4-0.

On Sept. 13, the Clippers dismantled the Skippers in a 5-0 win. Cohasset played a decent first half, but then were completely dominated during the second 40 minutes, where they were outscored 4-0.

Norwell got off to a typical fast start. In the seventh minute, forward Jenna Zarick lofted a beautiful cross from the right side that Meaghan Wiley put in for a goal.

Within another six minutes, it was 3-0. Junior Jenn Guiney circled around the Cohasset defense on the right side and put of our game a little bit toward the end of the first half, making us play long ball rather than our control game," offered Norwell interim coach Matt Henry. "But once we settled down and allowed the ball to do the work, we executed our plays, and played a very strong second half."

Norwell continued to pour the pressure on following Beach's tiebreaker, but it wasn't until the 63rd minute that senior James Finkenstaedt provided the Clippers a two goal cushion when he blasted an absolute pea just inside the upper right corner of the cage from the top of the box on a perfect cross-field lead pass from Garrett Bates (goal, two assists).

With the Skippers forced after this tally to loosen up their defense in a desperate comeback attempt, the game turned ugly as the Clippers potted four goals in the final 10 minutes.

Sophomore Kevin McCord scored the fourth and seventh goals, the first on a pretty through from Bates, the second on a follow of a Scott Kitchen shot with 20 seconds to play.

Kitchen made it 5-1 less than a minute after McCord's first score, and captain Ryan Henry scored the sixth goal when he was sent through by Olsen and calmly tucked the ball by the hard charging Brewer. This was Olsen's third assist of the game.

The Clippers opened the game almost as impressively as they ended it. Bates, Henry and Beach were all over the ball within striking distance of the Cohasset goal over the game's first 15 minutes, and only the aggressive play of Cohasset keeper Jesse Brewer and sweeper Craig Laugelle held the Clippers off the board.

The dam finally sprung a leak under the relentless pressure with 12:30 to play in the half, the final force provided on a sensational solo effort along the right sideline by Finkenstaedt. After collecting a weak sideline clear attempt on the 25-yard line, Finkenstaedt pushed the ball through a pair of Cohasset defenders with a nifty bit of footwork and a nice burst, and then lofted a pass over the crowd in front of the net to Bates on a far post run. Bates then one touched it and let fly with a low left-footed shot that beat Brewer just inside the far post.

This goal seemed to energize the host Skippers, in particular senior offensive leaders Dave Santiago and Chris Clark. This dynamic duo created several nice chances over the next five minutes, before finally teaming to net the equalizer seven minutes before the break. Clark wove his way into the box past a pair of defenders to force Norwell keeper Mike Allen to charge out, thus leaving Santiago uncovered on the short through pass. Norwell sweeper Jason Kulik very nearly got back into the play, but Santiago blasted it over his slide and into the vacated net to tie the game at 1-1.

The remainder of the half went back-and-forth, with neither team maintaining much in the way of control.

This gave coach Henry, who has been filling in the last few weeks while coach Jack Browne spends time with his ailing mother, plenty to talk about at halftime.

"I reminded them that Cohasset likes to put a lot of heavy pressure on the ball, and told them we couldn't let them take us out of our game plan," reported Henry. "The kids responded to that. They did a much better job of controlling the ball in the second half."

Clearly.

"I think a lot of that started with our team defense," coach Henry continued. "Everyone from the striker on back did their job, and then we spread the field to create a lot of one v one situations, which is what we want. It wouldn't be fair for me to give you even a handful of heroes in this game. Everyone contributed."

With the win, the Clippers remained perfect in South Shore League play at 7-0 (7-1 overall), while Cohasset fell into a tie for second place with Carver at 5-2 in league (6-2 overall).

Norwell and Cohasset each won league games on the road Tuesday to keep pace – the Clippers topping Hull and Cohasset doing the same against Mashpee.

Both teams have four league games remaining, including a game apiece versus Carver, the only team that provided much of a challenge for the Skippers and Clippers the first time through the league.

The way would certainly now appear to be paved for a Norwell repeat as SSL champs. The Clippers had little trouble with SSL rivals Abington, Harwich and Hull on the road the first time around, so it would be quite a stunner to see them not hold serve at home in the second go-rounds.

The lone offensive highlight of Thursday night's loss for the Cohasset boys to Norwell was provided by Dave Santiago.

Joshua's Run

The Seventh Annual Joshua's Run for the Jimmy Fund is scheduled for Oct. 18, at Peggotty Beach. This family event which has raised $111,000 for the Jimmy Fund since its inception in 1996, has a new fall date and is expected to be bigger and better than ever.

New to the event this year is the Wall of Wings. The Wall of Wings is a giant butterfly made up of patches that may be purchased by individuals and decorated by the buyer in order to honor a loved one and his/her battle with cancer. Each patch will be incorporated into the butterfly pattern. A new butterfly will be added each year and the butterflies will be linked together forming an "honoring" wall.

The event schedule is as follows: Kids Fun Run at 8:30 a.m.; Two-Mile Fun Run/Walk at 9 a.m.; and the Four-Mile Road Race at 10 a.m. Race day registration begins at 7:30 a.m. at Peggotty Beach. A kids entertainment tent will include face painting, balloons and a clown.

Norwell girls give Lady Skippers the boot again

in a shot over keeper CeCelia Chapman. Sophomore striker Jackie Vickers scored the Clippers' third goal, as she beat Chapman to a loose ball and put it in the open net.

It was shaping up to be another embarrassing loss for Cohasset, but head coach Deb Beal's team turned it around and, unlike their first match, put some pressure of Norwell goalie Jessica Baxter.

Junior forward Casey Anderson booted a strong shot from just outside the box in the 21st minute, which Baxter saved. In the second half, senior Sarah McMorris showed off her speed in getting past Norwell defenders. She collected a nice ball from junior forward Lauren Rizzotti, and hit the post with her shot.

In the 72nd minute, with the score still 3-0, Cohasset's leading scorer, Jenn Buckley, fired a quality lefty shot that Baxter saved to preserve her clean sheet. It was her sixth of the season and fifth in as many games.

Norwell had plenty chances of their own, and converted for their fourth goal of the evening in the 75th minute.

After senior Karen Fitzgerald almost put the Clippers fans in a state of euphoria with a seemingly sure goal that was kicked away at the last second by a Cohasset defender, Vickers collected the loose ball and put it in from the left side at point-blank range.

Cohasset senior captain Holly Graham was a force defensively Thursday night. Unfortunately, it wasn't enough to stop the South Shore League leading Norwell girls from coasting to a 4-0 win.

Vickers, Guiney and senior midfielder Colby Tallman consistently applied pressure on Cohasset defenders. As did Wiley, who twice in the second half wove through multiple defenders in the Skippers end of the field, only to have her shots just miss the back of the net.

Despite the loss, Beal was pleased with her team's effort.

"We didn't quit; that was a major step coming off a 5-0 loss two weeks ago," she said. "I'm not disappointed. I'm happy they were keeping their heads in the game."

The loss to Norwell came between two other league games for the Skippers, with mixed results.

Last Wednesday, they defeated Hull 3-0 on their home turf. McMorris, Rachel Garber and Nicole Whitney all scored. The shutout was split between Chapman and sophomore goalie Melissa Crowley-Buck, whom Beal said she brought up to get some varsity experience.

The coach said her team made some strides with the win over the Pirates.

"Our kids are starting to learn their jobs and do them well," Beal said.

On Monday, Carver defeated Cohasset, 4-2. The game was tied at two-all late in the second half, as Whitney assisted Buckley on the game-tying goal. The Skippers then gave up two goals to account for the final score.

"We seemed to break down again at some critical points," Beal said. "We blame each other for our mistakes and it is taking its toll on people."

For Buckley, it was her fourth goal of the season. Senior striker Gillian Weber scored the other Cohasset goal, her second on the year. Beal did say the fact that her team scored a couple goals was promising, but that the girls have to bring it up a notch and win some games.

The Skippers (now 2-5-1 on the year, 2-4-1 in the league) have two home contests this week, Tuesday against Mashpee and today in a non-league contest with Holbrook. Beal called this week critical, as Cohasset will probably have to win both games in order to keep a realistic chance at making the state tournament.

Lady Skippers scuttle Pirates

Bostwick said about Sturino, her senior defensive back who came into the game after starter Frannie Noble had to leave because she was sick. "She was fantastic. She picked up when Frannie Noble got sick and played very well."

Noble's loss had an impact as well.

"The girls felt awful about Frannie," Bostwick said. "They kept asking where Frannie is. When I told them, they all said they were going to win for Frannie."

Katie James gave Cohasset a 3-0 lead with three-and-a-half minutes left in the first half when she took advantage of a drive upfield by Kelly Hurley and scored.

With the 3-0 halftime lead, Bostwick made it a point to make sure her team stayed focused in the second half.

"I told them Hull is unpredictable," Bostwick said. "They're having a tough year, but I reminded them about last year. We were beating them 3-0 at the half and they came back and tied us. I told the girls I didn't want them taking any defensive corners and they didn't until the last seven minutes when I had some different players in there."

After Caron gave Cohasset a 4-0 lead in the second half, Jessie Guild finished the scoring with help from James.

"Jessie had a nice drive at the middle of the circle," Bostwick said. "It was a beautiful play. She blew it right by the goalie."

Goalie Caitlin Condon picked up her third shutout of the season with the win.

Bostwick said she was impressed with her forwards and halfbacks.

"The forwards were incredible," she said. "And our halfbacks played very well. Meghan Marr had a nice steady performance and Christina St. Pierre also had a steady, strong performance."

Another thing Bostwick preached at the half was using the team's superior skills to their advantage.

"I told them to use their non-stick dodges," Bostwick said. "I told them if they did that, they'd win. Mia Lieb-Lappen did a great job with that. She had a very nice game. She followed directions well and did everything I asked.

"Katherine Whoriskey also had a nice game. She used her non-stick dodges and did a phenomenal job."

Overall, Bostwick was thrilled with her team's play, but wasn't sure if it was all Cohasset's doing or if Hull didn't play well.

"I've never seen so much clean movement for position and passing," she said. "The defense played top-notch defense and kept their sticks down and they had great communication. I'm not sure if this was our playing so well or if Hull didn't play that well. Still, it was nice. It was a good test for Norwell. We'll just see what happens."

Cohasset played Norwell Wednesday. Game information was unavailable at press time.

Friday, Cohasset hosts Mashpee at 4 p.m. in a game Bostwick said should be a good one.

"We split with them last year," she said. "We beat them and tied them. It should be a pretty evenly matched game."

In action earlier in the week, Cohasset lost to Harwich.

COASTAL STARS REPORT

On Saturday, Sept. 27, the Coastal Star Mite B's got off to a winning start to the new season with a 3-0 victory over the South Shore Seahawks. Playing at the recently refurbished Rockland Rink, the Stars dominated from the first face-off, peppering a strong Seahawks goalie with a barrage of shots. Finally, with three minutes left in the first period, Patrick Holway put the puck on net and squeezed it under the goalie into the far corner of the net to put the Stars up 1-0. The Seahawks had a few scoring opportunities in the period but the team defense stood strong. Highlights included Joe Lasko racing from behind to lift the stick and steal the puck off a Seahawks defender before the shot was fired and Matt Burchill breaking up a play developing in front of the Stars net sending the puck up the boards.

In the second period, defenseman Mike O'Brien did a nice job thwarting the Seahawks as they tried to get on the board while the Stars offense kept getting their shots saved by the busy Seahawks goalie. The Stars refused to give up though and the pressure finally paid off in the waning seconds of the period when Brandon Winn got the puck to a rushing Dave Cataldo who got by the Seahawks defense and made the shot. The goalie made a nice save but the rebound was pounced on by Peter Bent who made no mistake about putting the puck by the goalie into the net.

With the Stars up 2-0, the defense, including Tom Powers, Jake Timcoe and Mike Hutshinson did a fantastic job playing the point position in their offensive zone. They were able to keep the puck in and give their forwards continued scoring opportunities. Nate Morse took advantage of this and scored the Stars third goal of the game with three minutes left in the period.

The team's overall performance was complemented by the hustle and passing skills of teammates Jack Kuppens, Nick Mulrey, Max Montgomery and Brendan Crane. The Stars goaltender Joey Commesso was well-protected, but when called upon made every save notching his first shutout of the season. The coaching staff of Charlie Mulrey, Dan Bent and Mike Timcoe is now working to prepare the team for the Pembroke Pythons who they must face-off against next Saturday in Brockton.

Monastery continues to serve the greater community

Glastonbury Abbey celebrates 50 years

By John Galluzzo
CORRESPONDENT

The monks of Glastonbury Abbey played to a full house, as a standing-room-only crowd filled the small chapel tucked away behind the main building for 9:30 mass Sunday, Sept. 14. The monks are used to sharing their prayer sessions and masses with the public — in fact, it's one of the things they most like to do — but that day in particular something special was in the air. Forty-nine years earlier, on September 14, 1954, the monks of the Order of St. Benedict celebrated the Feast of the Holy Cross, marking the official establishment of the Abbey.

The mass served as the kick-off to a yearlong celebration of the monk's 50th year of service to the South Shore.

"There are a lot of people who still don't know who we are and what we do here," said Father Timothy Joyce. "Even after 50 years. They still stop and ask if it's okay to come onto the grounds."

The Abbey is in fact, home to a ministry of hospitality. Described simply by Father Timothy as "a community of monks at prayer," the 11 monks who live there pray five times a day. Each formal prayer session attracts its own corps of regulars, citizens from the outside world that stop in when their schedules permit. "Some people will stop and pray with us at 6:30 in the morning on the way to work," said Father Timothy.

But the monks of Glastonbury Abbey offer much more than simply a peaceful place to pray. Their services to the people of the South Shore are wide and varied. They offer spiritual guidance and counseling to all who seek it, and take in as many as 3,000 people seeking spiritual retreats during the year. They assist local parishes where needed, hearing confession and presiding at mass.

In 1980 they purchased the closed Lincoln School in Hingham and turned it into low-cost housing for the elderly. Run by a professional manager, who is visited once a week by one of the brothers, the 60 apartments hold about 72 tenants. They even built the "tot lot" currently standing on the site.

The 2001 construction of their conference center, hidden from the view of Hull Street by a row of trees on a rise at the back of the property, allows the monks a chance to offer another level of service to the people of the South Shore. For instance, the Abbey now hosts a regular interfaith lecture series. Last year, in the aftermath of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, they presented a series themed "Hope in the Midst of Uncertainty." This year, in celebration of the half-century of service, the theme is "Monastic Spirituality." Brothers from around the country (and as far away as England) will lecture, as will representatives from the Hindu and Buddhist ways of life.

Bumps in the road

The road to the 50-year celebration has not always been an easy one. According to Father Timothy, who is just now completing a book on the history of the first 50 years of the Abbey, preparing for a Nov. 9 release, the brothers have seen good times and bad.

The ministry was founded by monks from Wisconsin.

"Abbot Edmund looked at a number of possible sites," said Father Timothy, "in Duxbury, Marshfield, Somerville, and West Roxbury. At that time this site was being used as the Tower Day Camp." The main building on the property, built about 1912, was a summer home for a Boston merchant, who also built the bell tower in 1920, a "pre-Depression playhouse." Unmarried and without heirs, after he left it the site was used as housing for summer visitors to Hingham, a catering establishment, an inn and other purposes before becoming the day camp. Still, even then, it wasn't the first choice for Abbot Edmund.

"He wanted to buy World's End," said Father Timothy. "He had some real grandiose thinking. But the family wouldn't sell." Instead, the Tower Day Camp gave way to Glastonbury Abbey, the first Benedictine monastery in Massachusetts outside of Boston, blessed by Cardinal Cushing at its founding.

"This was in the 1950s, when the church was exploding," said Father Timothy. Parishes were being built at a record pace in the aftermath of World War II. Abbot Richard, the first leader of the brothers of Glastonbury Abbey, had "big thoughts, big plans," for the site. A Glastonbury Latin School, a place where young men could prepare for seminary by studying Latin and other subjects, brought in as many as 60 at a time. "Men in their 20s and 30s, just out of service, could use their GI Bill to attend the school. We had them everywhere, in the attic, everywhere." After the 1962 construction of the avant-garde chapel, the 10 rooms beneath it became dorm rooms. "We had four in a room. They were pressing the walls out. They brought lots of life."

The 1960s burst the bubble of the monastery, though, both through the social upheaval of the Vietnam War, the sexual revolution and the general movement towards counterculture, and the church's Vatican II decree that Latin need no longer be taught, that it was a dead language. The Latin School "died" in 1971. That's when the brothers shifted their course to offer more spiritual direction and retreat facilities. They soon purchased Stonecrest, a home across the street, for use in religious education and as a retreat center. Since then, according to Father Timothy, the course has steadied.

Committee Members Patricia Murphy, Lesley Grilli and Karen Ferrari peruse the cookbook they created to celebrate Glastonbury Abbey's 50th anniversary.

Special sermon

In his sermon on Sept. 14, Father Richard J. Malone, Regional Bishop for the South Region of the Boston Archdiocese, talked of a trip he and others took along the Via della Rosa, walking the path of the cross in Jerusalem. He described a scene in which they were surrounded by a swirl of activity, yet they moved forward peacefully, even with the tempest around them. He also spoke of the monasteries of the Middle Ages, places of peace and stability, preservers of the past in a world falling apart. Glastonbury Abbey, according to Father Timothy, offers just that kind of security.

Father Malone, who presided at the mass, spoke of a strong spiritual energy at the Abbey, especially coming through the visitors to the site. "There's a vitality here, even at a difficult time for the church, a real robustness of the faith. Sure, some people have jumped off the boat, but most have stayed. The monastery provides just the kind of center of peace and hope we need in times like this."

Looking for a way to contribute to the celebration of the first 50 years of Glastonbury Abbey, a few lay friends of the brothers – Pat Murphy, Lesley Grilli, Pat Brennan, Judith McHugh, Karen Ferrari, and Gayle Walsh – formed a committee to solicit, test, taste and ultimately publish recipes from around the United States and Europe in a Glastonbury Abbey 50th Anniversary Cookbook, a process that took about a year.

"We collected about 1000 recipes," said Murphy, co-chairperson of the committee. "We tried to include photographs of everyone that's part of life at the Abbey." In the end, the cookbook offers more than 600 recipes from about 350 kitchens. "I really have to say, it's a good cookbook!" The book is dedicated to the late Father Richard Bourgeois, who passed away last Nov. 9, and is available at the Glastonbury Abbey Bookstore.

Father Timothy says there are major decisions to be made regarding the future of the site. "The main building is almost 90 years old, and needs a lot of work. We have an architect coming to discuss options with us," he said.

To Abbot Nicholas Morcone, though, 50 years is just a beginning. "The Order celebrated the 1500th anniversary of the birth of St. Benedict in 1980. But 50 years means we've now established roots here, established a spiritual presence. The conference center is our vote of confidence in our own future. We're here for the long haul."

Photographers show vision in art center exhibit

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The photographer's vision is what counts first and foremost in photography as an art form.

That's the conceptual theme of the aptly titled The Photographer's Vision, the fall exhibit on display through Oct. 26 at Cohasset's South Shore Art Center. The show's overall aim is to show the distinct individual visions of four South Shore-based photo-artists, three from Marshfield and one from Pembroke.

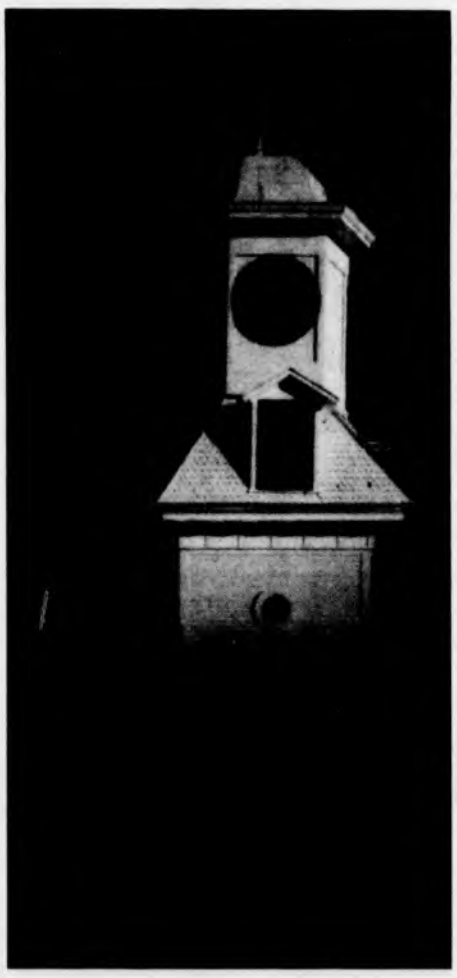
Hancie Stokes and her mom, Kim Dickenson discuss the work of photographers Mike Sleeper and Lance Keimig at the Sept. 19 opening of "The Photographers Vision."



The exhibit succeeds in showcasing each artist's work in a context where the most common element is diversity. The four photographers are easily distinguishable in theme, tone and content over the total of more than 40 pieces.

Each artist has a subtitle for their segment of the show as well.

"Taking the Broad View" is the collection of colorful, panoramic, horizon-angled landscape pieces by Marshfield photographer Mike Sleeper. Shot on the South Shore and Cape Cod areas, Sleeper's pastoral and oceanside scenes give viewers an eyeful of sun, wind and rain playing off natural landmark elements, such as meadows, marshes and dunes. Duxbury Beach, Provincetown's Race Point, Marshfield's Damon's Point and the South River Marsh are among the artist's locations.

"My objective is to present an image that reveals the dynamic inter-relationship between land and water and sky in order to draw the viewer into a scene," said Sleeper in his exhibit statement.

Lance Keimig, a Pembroke resident, offers images of his Yosemite excursion of this summer in his segment titled "Here On Earth: The Unexpected Landscape." Keimig's specialty of black-and-white night photography makes an effective showcase for his stark portraits of spare vegetation growth in a desert landscape. His five-part "Tufa Study" series, tufa being limestone formed of carbonate deposited by springs, is most intriguing.

"A Night Photograph is a representation of time compressed into a single moment. I'm primarily concerned with the way that photographing at night expresses time," said Keimig, who also leads photo tours of Ireland, Scotland, Italy and Morocco as well as teaching photography classes and workshops.

Except for his "Rio Grande Gorge," an impressive aerial landscape shot where the mountain shadows reflect a royal purple on the great river's surface, Marshfield's J. Micheal Sullivan is most concerned with man-made objects in his ironically titled segment "Black and White in Color." The title is what Sullivan describes as a series of images "that explores the interaction of hue versus luminosity in the same image."

As a result, Sullivan pulls intrigue from the ordinary in images of church steeple clocks, silos, ice machines, highway overpasses and sightseeing binoculars. Possibly most captivating is "Chimayo Crossroads," a study of a remote station house at a junction on Route 92A outside Santa Fe.

Cynthia Vallino, also of Marshfield, craftily makes surreal abstraction out of natural images in her nine-part Natural Selection Series. Her close-up, finely detailed shots of items such as sand, ice, grass and water surfaces manage to reveal whole new worlds just beneath the real one.

"I try to 'see' things that may easily get lost when looking at the big picture," said Vallino. "By defining and photographing a scene in this way, the subtle complexities of nature often come more into focus."

The Photographers Vision is on display through Oct. 26 at the South Shore Art Center 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset. For gallery hours and information call (781) 383-2787.

Hit band from the 90s puts a new spin on their act

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

You remember the Spin Doctors, don't you?

Apparently, a decade after the band hit its high-water mark in the early 1990s, with hits such as "Two Princes" and "Little Miss Can't Be Wrong," many fans still do. Hit records tend to do that for a band or recording act, regardless of how far that band or act might drift in or out of fashion in the years that follow.

Ten years ago, the Spin Doctors also found a certain niche in being viewed as one of the first of the alternative-era rock bands to cross over into the mainstream. This, despite the fact the New York City quartet was never comfortable with the "alternative" labeling or marketing so prevalent in the music biz of the era. From its late 80s beginnings, the band has thought of itself as a funky, high-energy, jam-band playing old school rock and roll.

"I'm surprised to see how young some of the audience is at our shows now. Some of them even say that a Spin Doctors record is the first one they ever bought."
Spin Doctors lead singer Chris Barron

This is evidently what fans and critics have been noticing in the last couple of years since the Spin Doctors have reunited. After a seven-year hiatus, the original band's return to the scene broke ground with a one-off gig for a special occasion in 2001, then ensued with a spring, 2002 mini-tour, followed by a summer tour later that year covering the East and

Irish bread pudding

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I often frequent a local Irish pub called Matt Murphy's for lunch since it is an oasis of hearty homemade food amidst of sea of turkey wraps and ice-cream-scoop tuna sandwiches. They don't serve soda, their portions are huge, and their bread pudding is what a Rolls Royce is to a Hyundai – massive and awe-inspiring. Since I already considered myself a bit of an expert on this particular dessert, I asked the owner, Siobhan, for the recipe and went into the kitchen to unlock its secrets.

Bread pudding has lots of problems, not the least of which is getting the right proportion of bread to pudding. Many such recipes are nothing more than baked custards with occasional bits of bready flotsam. Using my own recipe for Classic Bread Pudding and Matt Murphy's recipe (I had an ingredients list but no proportions) as guides, I began with 16 cups of bread, a large amount by any standard. (My recipe calls for a mere 8 cups of bread.) When baked with my standard 5 cups of milk/cream mixture, the pudding was still too wet. I noted that the Matt Murphy recipe not only had twice as much bread, it also had less liquid, so I ended up using slightly more then 4 cups to achieve a drier, more toothsome texture. Referring to my recipe once again, I reduced the eggs to just 4 and brought the sugar down to 2/3 cup from 3/4 cup. I fiddled with a few other ingredients – vanilla and spices – and then went on to test the soaking and baking methods.

I found that a full hour of soaking was best (for an even texture) and a large 9 by 13 pan is preferred. I finally decided on an oven temperature of 325 degrees – hotter temperatures made a rubbery, tougher pudding. The best thing about the high proportion of bread to custard is that baking time is less crucial and the bread can undergo more thorough browning. (In fact, I bake this bread pudding until it is dark brown.) The top (which I brush with melted butter) turns out crispy, a far cry from the soggy texture of most similar recipes. Even better, this pudding can be made ahead and reheated.

Patrons of Matt Murphy's often feel that the sauce makes the dish, and with a one-two-three-four punch of butter, maple syrup, bourbon, and cream, it is no wonder. When you serve this recipe, I recommend nothing more than a light salad or consommé as a main course – anything more substantial would not leave sufficient room for dessert!

MATT MURPHY'S BREAD PUDDING

This pudding can be made several hours ahead of time and then reheated in a 300-degree oven for 10 minutes or until warmed through.

For The Pudding

4 large eggs

2/3 cup granulated sugar

2 cups plus 2 tablespoons whole milk

2 cups plus 2 tablespoons heavy cream

1 1/2 teaspoons vanilla extract

3 tablespoons triple sec or other orange-flavored liqueur

1/4 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon cinnamon

16 cups firm white bakery bread cut into 1 1/4-inch cubes

1 1/2 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted, plus more for the pan

For The Sauce

2 tablespoons unsalted butter

1/2 cup pure maple syrup

1/4 cup light rum, dark rum, bourbon or Irish whiskey

1/4 cup heavy cream

1. For the pudding, whisk the eggs and sugar together in a large bowl until well blended. Whisk in the milk, cream, vanilla, triple sec, salt and cinnamon. Add the bread and toss to coat evenly. Let soak for an hour, gently turning with a spatula every 20 minutes or so to allow the bread chunks to soak into the custard evenly.

2. Meanwhile, heat the oven to 325 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Generously butter a 9 x 13 or an 8 x 12-inch baking dish. Transfer the bread mixture to the prepared pan and adjust the bread chunks to form an even layer. Press down on the bread to submerge into the liquid as much as possible. Brush the top of the exposed cubes with the melted butter. Place in the oven and bake for 45 to 50 minutes or until the pudding is puffy and dark golden brown. Remove from oven and let stand until warm, about 30 minutes.

3. For the sauce, heat the butter in a heavy-duty skillet over medium heat until foamy. Add the syrup and rum and cook until thickened and coats the back of a spoon, 2 to 3 minutes. Add the cream and cook for an additional minute. Cut the pudding into squares, drizzling the sauce over each serving. Top with lightly sweetened whipped cream or vanilla ice cream.

West Coasts and Midwest, and mainly a series of one-off national dates in 2003. One of those dates brings the Doctors to Plymouth for a show at Memorial Hall, with opening act, also recently regrouped alternative-era rockers The Presidents of the United States of America. The bands play Plymouth Friday, Oct. 10 at 7: 30 p.m.

"The four original members of the Spin Doctors agreed to play a show for closing night at a New York club, the Wetlands, in September, 2001," said Chris Barron, the Doctors' "goateed" and flamboyant lead singer. "Nobody in the band thought at the time that anything would come of it, after we hadn't played together as a band for seven years, but then nobody wanted to say no. But when we got together to rehearse, it was amazing to us, because we sounded like we'd never broken up. Finally, we played the show, and had a great time."

Along with Barron, the regrouped original Doctors include guitarist/vocalist Eric Schenkman, bassist Mark White and drummer Aaron Comess.

Barron offered these candid recollections of the Spin Doctors' early 90s peak period.

Nowadays, the Doctors have rediscovered that they had first come together as friends in the first place. And the shows, Barron said, have reclaimed old fans while winning over new ones.

"We had two songs in the Top Five, we played for millions, we made appearances on national TV, we had a ball," Barron said.

In their heyday, the Doctors totaled more than 10 million in album sales, including more than 8 million of the band's 1992 smash Pocket Full of Kryptonite, and landed two major music festival appearances at Woodstock, 94 and Glastonbury (Scotland). Then what happened? Mounting band tensions, the exiting of original members and Barron losing his voice due to vocal cord paralysis. The Doctors were officially disbanded by the end of 1996.

"There was a lot of pressure being at that commercial level in the music business, a lot of burnout, and tensions in the band were high. We all just hated each other," Barron said.

Nowadays, the Doctors have rediscovered that they had first come together as friends in the first place. And the shows, Barron said, have reclaimed old fans while winning over new ones.

"I'm surprised to see how young some of the audience is at our shows now," said Barron. "Some of them even say that a Spin Doctors record is the first one they ever bought."

The Spin Doctors will perform at Plymouth Memorial Hall with The Presidents of the United States of America Friday, Oct. 10 at 7: 30 p.m. Plymouth Memorial Hall is located at 83 Court Street. For tickets and information call (866) 468-7619 or visit www.ticketweb.com.

Planting projects for the fall season

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the month of September draws to a close and the days grow shorter with the passing of the autumnal equinox, gardeners hasten to complete a wide range of gardening chores. Autumn in New England is the season for planting, transplanting, and for putting the gardens to bed.

Healthy nursery stock is still available at our local garden centers, often accompanied by sales on even prime new trees and shrubs. A glorious selection of spring-flowering bulbs awaits. Fall plantings of snowdrops, crocuses, daffodils, tulips, and hyacinths will reap magical springtime rewards. Spectacular chrysanthemums in warm harvest hues, brilliant yellows and whites, burgundy, and shades of purple and pink, create a kaleidoscope of festive color. Pots of asters, smothered with multitudes of daisies in vibrant tones of rich royal purple, glowing pink, vivid raspberry and glistening white, intermingle with the long-lasting foliage of decorative kale to produce a dazzling display. Bittersweet, gourds, pumpkins and cornstalks have all appeared to decorate and revitalize our tired landscapes and announce the arrival of autumn.

Container gardens may also benefit from a facelift during the waning days of the growing season. Just as we grow tired of our summer attire and don our new fall wardrobes, so our planters seem to require updating at this time of year. Leggy, overgrown annuals lose their appeal and even colorful, robust plantings may become tiresome. Replacing just a few straggly plants with brightly colored chrysanthemums, ornamental peppers, kale or asters can tremendously improve the overall appearance of a whiskey barrel or plant box. Although many gardeners become ruthless and start from scratch, I enjoy the mature trailing plants and find just a few substitutions sufficient to give my containers a fresh, new look.

Experienced gardeners realize that killing frosts are inevitable in the days to come. Prior to killing frosts, take cuttings of tender plants to root indoors for next season. Many tropical plants and tender annuals including coleus and impatiens are easily propagated, especially if the stems are dipped in a rooting powder and inserted into pots of perlite or vermiculite; containers should be kept in a warm, bright location. Smaller plants could be lifted and transplanted into containers filled with potting soil. Geraniums and begonias will flower all winter on a sunny windowsill, a welcome reminder of the season past and a new growing season to come. Closely inspect these cuttings, transplants and your houseplants that were enjoying a summer vacation outdoors for pests. Somehow insects seem to know which plants are destined for a warm, cozy winter indoors. Many often go unnoticed for weeks while sucking the vitality out of our plants. Although no insects may be readily observed, eggs are often laid on the foliage and hatch once the plants are brought into warmer environments. One or two applications of a light horticultural oil spray, which is essentially odorless and nontoxic except to bugs, will eliminate a large percentage of the typical intruders including aphids, scale, mealy bugs, white flies, and spider mites. Be sure to check the drainage holes of the containers for sow bugs, worms, slugs and snails or you may discover them crawling across the floors of your home.

Gradually acclimate transplants and houseplants that were outdoors to the lower light conditions they will encounter in your home environment. Even houseplants that spent the summer in the shade received much brighter light than they are likely to find indoors. If these plants can be moved into a sunroom or porch first, the gradual reduction in light will be less of a shock. Although nearly all plants experience some leaf-drop or dieback as they adjust to lower light and humidity in our dry, heated indoor spaces, fewer leaves will turn yellow and drop.

Many perennials benefit from fall division and transplanting is often more successful at this time of year. With cooler temperatures and shorter daylight hours, plants are beginning to enter a dormant period causing root systems to diminish and plants are less inclined to suffer from shock when transplanted in autumn than during the spring when root systems are rapidly expanding. As a general rule, divide and transplant spring blooming perennials in the fall and fall-bloomers in spring. Perennials that produce flowers in midsummer may be separated in either season.

Daylilies, Siberian iris, and Japanese iris can be divided in either spring or fall, but fall transplants are more likely to bloom the following year. Fall division of large clumps of hostas enables these handsome leafy beauties to regain their symmetrical form and stature by the next growing season. Perennials that are divided later in the season will benefit from the application of a light winter mulch after the ground freezes to prevent heaving due to temperature fluctuations.

Set aside a little time each week to patrol your grounds for misplaced wildflowers. The soft, damp earth of recent weeks offers an ideal opportunity to make quick work of the bountiful crop of weeds flourishing beneath the drooping foliage of declining perennials where they are secretly beginning to disperse their seeds. A few minutes each day will save hours of weeding next spring. As dusk approached on a cool, crisp September eve, heaps of seed-laden wildflowers quickly filled my tarp dramatically improving the overall appearance of the garden and providing a wonderful sense of accomplishment.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 1

After a barrage of planetary activity in the past two months, October offers an opportunity to catch your breath and focus on new ideas and undertakings. The first three weeks are most favorable for getting new projects off the ground.

A Sagittarius moon continues to generate optimism and confidence today. New beginnings are promoted until 10:25 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A Capricorn moon takes over at 11:21 p.m.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. This is a day to get things done. Plan to initiate new activities before 12:34 p.m., when the Capricorn moon forms a harmonious contact to Jupiter. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:09 p.m. A full moon is building and will culminate October 10. Sidestep doubts, frustrations between 7:22-10:22 p.m., when the moon opposes Saturn. Focus on the positives and go with the flow.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3

A Capricorn moon prompts you to be more ambitious and focused today. You can be most productive. Zero in on career issues, business decisions. Influences are prime for making long-range plans or taking on new responsibilities. Today's planetary combination inspires judgments based on a combination of knowledge and intuition. The Capricorn moon forms a harmonious contact to Mercury at 6:40 p.m. and becomes inactive. The sun forms a flowing 120-degree contact to Neptune this evening. Relax and recharge your batteries.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4

The moon enters freedom-oriented Aquarius at 3:45 a.m., remaining there throughout the weekend. Step out of your usual routine and do something different. New is in; old is out. Keep an open mind and be more adventurous. A lunar alignment to Neptune makes this evening prime for partying. Take a walk on the wild side.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 5

An Aquarius moon all day may point you in new directions. Read yesterday's advice. This is a great day to network, brainstorm and dream. Impromptu get-togethers, spur of the moment ideas will be the most successful.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 6

A mixed bag of planetary influences can make for a hectic morning. Take it slow and easy. The Aquarius moon aligns with Uranus at 9:06 a.m. and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Saturn culminates at 9:40 a.m. The moon enters Pisces at 10:20 a.m. and conjoins with Mars at 11:38 a.m. Use extra caution while driving or operating machinery; take your time. As the afternoon goes on, potentially difficult influences ease up considerably and a mellow Pisces moon takes over. Mercury moves into Libra at 9:28 p.m., remaining there until October 24.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7

Start your day and initiate new activities before 10:32 a.m., when a harmonious alignment of the Pisces moon to Saturn culminates. After that, finish projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. At 7:30 p.m. the moon interacts with Pluto and becomes inactive. Choose your words carefully and avoid touchy subjects in this period.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 8

The moon is inactive as it travels in the last sign of the zodiac until 7:07 p.m. That means that new starts are off limits. Instead, tie up loose ends and follow through on unfinished business. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. Influences turn around completely at 7:07 p.m., when the moon enters Aries. A harmonious Venus/Uranus alignment makes this an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of evening.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9

Energy and emotions run high today. Keep a cool head no matter what is happening around you. Channel your energies constructively. The moon continues its travel in Aries, and the full moon continues to build up. Venus moves into Scorpio at 2:56 p.m., remaining there until November 2. A lunar alignment to Saturn at 8:25 p.m. may bring a lull period. Don't let doubt, fear or frustration creep in. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10

The full moon culminates at 3:27 a.m., 16 1/2-degrees of Aries/Libra. The moon continues active travel in Aries, generating high energy today. However, harmonious alignments of Venus-Mars and the sun-Pluto aid productivity, creativity. Zero in on areas of your life you want to change. This is a time to formulate a new plan and start working toward your goals. Kick back and go for the good times this evening.

Thurs. 9

ZBA may seek daycare center, other amenities

Deliberations on Avalon underway

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If the Zoning Board of Appeals has its way then AvalonBay will include a daycare center in its plans to build an apartment complex off Route 3A.

At this point, it is not clear how the ZBA will come down on the project itself. It could either issue a comprehensive permit with conditions such as including a daycare center, or deny the project altogether.

If approved, the 200-unit apartment complex that would be built under Chapter 40B, the state affordable housing law, can skirt most zoning bylaws such as, housing density, in exchange for providing some affordable housing.

"I think this is more important than a fitness center and pool."
— Ben Lacy, ZBA

The number of units is also on the table, ZBA chairman Woody Chittick said last week. The ZBA is looking at how many units Avalon could build on the 62-acre site and still remain financially viable.

Also up in the air is whether 20 or 25 percent of the units would be set aside as affordable. If Avalon goes with 25 percent, those apartments would have to be affordable for those making no more than 80 percent of the area median income or $62,650 for a family of four. With 20 percent, the income limit drops to 50 percent of the median or $40,200.

Last Wednesday, the ZBA conducted its first public deliberation on the project. Also planned are "informal" negotiating sessions, which would include Chittick, a selectman and the Town Manager, Avalon, and 40B consultants hired by the town. Those sessions won't be posted because they do not include a quorum of any one board, Chittick said. [Public notification of government meetings of committees and subcommittees is required under the Open Meeting Law].

He explained the negotiating sessions will help iron out details that would be brought back to the ZBA deliberating session that would be posted.

The daycare center came up during the first ZBA public deliberation last Wednesday night along with several other potential conditions.

Also on the table are sidewalks along Route 3A and up Sohier Street, mosquito control in the storm-water retention ponds and catch basins, organic landscaping, location of the school bus stop, pedestrian crossings across 3A, and walking and biking trails connecting to Thayer and Whitney Woods, to name a few.

The ZBA also discussed reducing the grade of the driveway into the complex from 8 to 6 percent as a safety measure and the potential for a traffic light at Sohier Street.

The ZBA closed the yearlong Avalon hearing last month and has until Oct. 26 to reach a decision without an extension that Avalon would have to agree to.

ZBA member Ben Lacy thought the clubhouse would be

Food fight

Health, school boards at odds over school lunch

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Members of the Board of Health will not give up on their quest to make sure Cohasset schools offer the healthiest lunch choices possible. While members of the School Department said students do not have a problem with obesity, which can be evidenced by a walk down the halls, the Board of Health said nutrition cannot be measured by the way a student looks.

Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo and Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik met with Supt. Edward Malvey, School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn and Food Services Director Robert Levy to discuss the matter.

At the School Committee meeting last week, Flynn said the issues between the boards had "been ironed out."

However, while Bobo said "We had a very fruitful conversation," he was still dismayed at hearing the School Committee doesn't think there is a problem with the food choices at the schools.

"They say they don't have a problem because there are very few obese children," said Bobo, who went on to say that many students of high school age have the opposite problem of being malnourished as a result of eating disorders, such as anorexia and bulimia.

Board of Health member Peggy Chapman said the assumptions being made by the school board worry her because

A banner day for Consignment Shop

Reopens with some changes

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If last week's "grand opening" is a gauge then the Cohasset Consignment Shop in Tedeschi Plaza off Route 3A is still a favorite among shoppers looking for everything from designer fashions and fine china to bric-a-brac.

Dozens of bargain hunters flocked to the store, which is celebrating its 50th year and has reopened with a new management team and a few other changes.

One noticeable difference is the current work of local artists, photographers and artisans on display that is also available for purchase with part of the proceeds going to the shop which provides money for the 91-year-

Rising building utility costs put budget in deficit

Schools to seek funds at STM

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

School utilities and transportation are likely to take center stage at the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting when the School Department is expected to ask the town for roughly $355,000.

The schools will seek $260,000 to help cover the rising costs for utilities, which dramatically increased last year, and are expected to be high again this year.

The School Committee will also present a capital request, asking for funds to purchase one new special education van at an estimated cost of $35,000, and a new school bus at roughly $60,000.

According to school Business Manager Ivan Klimko, the total cost for utilities for all three schools last year was $259,925 — but the schools had only budgeted for $95,900. This left a deficit of $164,025, due in large part to the construction going on at the middle-high school with utilities used by workers during extended hours, with some effect from Deer Hill construction. In addition, the increased price in natural gas coupled with a severe winter pushed the budget further off its mark.

In light of the situation, the Building Commission gave

School chiefs talk about charter schools

Supt. Edward Malvey said he recently met with superintendents from Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, and Hanover to discuss their collective thoughts on the proposed South Shore Maritime Academy Charter School, slated to be located in Cohasset and open its doors to students of the region in the fall of 2005.

"It's fair to say that any attempt at providing an alternate learning experience for our students deserves a lot of merit," Malvey said, but added financial impacts to the public school system have to be taken into consideration.

School Committee Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts said she agrees the project deserves merit for what it is trying to do, but is also concerned about its taking away funding for public education, and hopes the School Committee will be strongly involved with the process regardless of whether the SSMACS is approved or not.

"If this one doesn't go through, there will probably be another one," she said, and another charter school in the area could make it difficult to provide the quality education Cohasset schools have been known for.

Malvey also mentioned the town already has maritime work being done by students through the Center for Student Coastal Research, located in the former Hagerty House on Parker Avenue. He said he had spoken with President of the CSCR Jack Buckley, who said the charter school proposal came as a complete surprise.

"I don't know as there is a need for another maritime program," said Malvey, which will likely come up when the proposed school has to defend its statement of need in the community.

"Clearly we are meeting a need and an interest," for maritime research in the community, said Tebbetts.

Malvey said he will continue to discuss the charter school issue at the larger South Shore superintendent's meeting and the state Superintendent's Association meeting.

"We don't want to be too quick in judgement," Malvey said, adding superintendents will discuss all available information before taking a formal stance on the proposed school. He also said final approval of the school will be in the state's hands.

Clarification on abutter's stance

Judy Flint, 215 Main St., is opposed to the proposed 105-unit Cedarmere project off Beechwood Street.

"For the record, I am neither against senior housing nor an affordable element to this housing," Flint told the Mariner this week. "What I oppose is the proposed density of the development and a Planning Board that suggests a single-family development would be devastating to the community."

A quote attributed to Flint in a story in the Oct. 2 Mariner covering the Sept. 24 Planning Board Hearing on Cedarmere may have given readers the impression Flint supports the project.

The Mariner regrets any confusion this may have caused.

DeLorenzo to retire

After 18 years in the school system, Middle-High School Vice Principal Jack DeLorenzo will retire at the end of this school year.

"Jack has been an absolute pillar for the school district," said Supt. Edward Malvey, adding DeLorenzo is the kind of person he always felt comfortable going to for advice.

"He's been a fixture in the Cohasset School System for many years," said School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn. "They're big shoes to fill, but he clearly has earned the right to retire."

In respect to the construction at the schools, Malvey said he doesn't think the projects would have been completed so efficiently without the help of DeLorenzo.

"He has put his heart and soul into every minute of that project. He's going to be very hard to replace," he said.

The School Committee and Malvey expressed their thanks for his years of service and wish him well in the future.

"I would just like to thank Jack for his service throughout the years and wish he and his wife and family nothing but health and happiness in the years ahead," Malvey said.

Kilpatrick to resign

After seven years in the Cohasset school system, primarily working in special education, Student Services Secretary Sharon Kilpatrick will resign from her position effective Friday, Oct. 10 to take a job in the private sector in Boston.

"She has lived through several SPED (special education) directors," and has provided such stability in the office during times of transition, said Supt. Edward Malvey. "She was my go-to person."

"She has been a tremendous employee and we wish her the best," he said.

Deer Hill re-dedication

A rededication ceremony has been set for Friday, Oct. 24 at 1 p.m. at the Deer Hill School. There will also be an open house held Saturday, Oct. 25 from 9 a.m. until noon.

Selectmen to seek meeting with DHCD

Housing guidelines need clarification

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen will ask to meet with the state Department of Housing and Community Development to answer some questions about the Local Initiative Program. Because the LIP process is new to Cohasset, the board feels it needs to pin down specifics before making decisions on potential projects.

The role Selectmen will play in the Cedarmere decision-making process is much more involved than was previously thought. Cedarmere, a 105-unit senior housing project planned for off Beechwood Street, is proposing affordable housing under LIP.

"If the Selectmen didn't approve it, it wouldn't go forward," Town Planner Liz Harrington said.

Harrington, along with consultant David Fulton, and Planning Board member Peter Pratt, hoped to provide an overview of what a LIP project entails for the board Tuesday. But the discussion revealed DHCD clarification was needed.

The town is trying to reach the 10 percent threshold set by the state for affordable housing.

Currently, there are three major projects — Avalon, Cedarmere and the Cook Estate — which all have affordable components and could help the town achieve that 10 percent.

Cedarmere and the Cook Estate will have their affordable components considered as LIP projects, while Avalon is a 40-B project.

Harrington describes LIP projects as being almost a "friendly 40B." Towns can make decisions based more on their individual needs, including everything down to the design of the buildings and the landscaping plans. LIP projects serve as a way for a town to become proactively involved with the development projects in their area.

Harrington also said LIP is the mechanism by which the town makes sure units qualify or "count" toward the number of total affordable units. It helps create affordable housing by providing technical assistance to communities and developers who are working together to create affordable housing for low and moderate income households. With LIP projects, the town and developer must work together.

Harrington describes LIP projects as being almost a "friendly 40B."

LIP projects differ from 40B projects because 40B developers are not required to work with the town, and a town can end up with developments that do not meet the requirements it has set. A 40B project can sidestep the local bylaws, providing 25 percent of the units qualify as long-term affordable housing.

The proposed Cedarmere project has filed for a special permit from the Planning Board under the town's Senior Overlay District bylaw. Developers plan to develop the affordable portion of the project as a LIP.

However, under the LIP program, affordable units must be comparable to market rate units in size and amenities, which has caused some speculation as to whether the Cedarmere project would pass muster with the state. Cedaremere's affordable component is proposed in a separate building from the market-rate condos. Harrington said some clarification will be needed as to whether the DHCD will think that is acceptable or not.

Because the guidelines for LIP projects are constantly being updated, it makes it hard to get direct answers to questions, Harrington said. Selectmen hope to meet with the DHCD as soon as possible and have asked the Planning Board to contact Cedarmere developers and ask them to write up an executive summary of their project for the board's review.

Music Circus to designate smoking section

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Patrons of the Music Circus will have to smoke in a designated area when the performance season kicks off again next year, the Board of Health said.

The town's tough new smoking bylaw makes lighting up illegal in all public places and workplaces — including restaurant patio areas and within 20 feet of any entrance of a workplace — so the Music Circus, which has a unique venue, has been working with the health board to come up with a solution, Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said.

The new designated smoking area is tentatively planned to be located in the back by the main offices.

Because the Music Circus has a series of aisles with runways which surround the tent, as well as several concession stands, legally only the parking lot would be considered an appropriate place to smoke under the bylaw, Godzik said. However, because of the extenuating circumstances, the rules will be adapted to accommodate those patrons who choose to smoke.

Godzik said he met with Music Circus General Manager Vince Longo, who will decide where to have a designated smoking area on the grounds.

Godzik said the Music Circus prohibits smoking both under the tent and on aisles leading into the tent, which is enforced. The new designated smoking area is tentatively planned to be located in the back by the main offices.

While the parking lot was considered as an alternate smoking area, current rules at the Music Circus prohibit patrons from reentering the grounds once they have left.

Godzik said Longo will come before the board next spring with a definite plan, to be approved before the venue opens for the summer.

ZBA floats Avalon daycare facility

a good location for a daycare center.

"I think this is more important than a fitness center and pool," he said.

Chittick, the ZBA chairman, did an informal survey of the nursery schools in town that told him lack of daycare is a real problem. The ZBA also thinks the complex might attract an influx of families with toddlers.

Lacy thought a daycare center that would be open to those who live at Avalon and anywhere else in town would be a good way to help integrate the apartment complex into the community.

Avalon officials appeared cool to the proposal, although they did not rule it out.

Scott Dale of Avalon said if there is a need for daycare in Cohasset, the free enterprise system should provide the answer.

"That is usually the way it works," he said. Dale said the clubhouse wouldn't be an appropriate site but a third-party vendor at the complex might be an option.

The ZBA also wants to think about the density issue. ZBA consultant Mike Jacobs said the board had to come up with "a real solid" reason why 175 or 150 units would be better from an environmental and safety standpoint. He said the economics of the project should not drive that decision.

The ZBA is also looking at the mix of one-, two- and three-bedroom units with an eye toward reducing the proposed three-bedroom units that might attract families with school-children. Many residents have expressed concern that Avalon would flood the town with school-aged kids.

Public deliberations are slated for 10 a.m., Sat., Oct. 11; and 7:30 p.m., Oct. 14, 15, 20 and 23.. Interested citizens should check the bulletin board outside the Town Clerk's office for changes or call the Town Clerk at 781-383-4100 for an update.

Boards debate over school lunch

children who look healthy are not necessarily making good choices for lifelong health.

"They look healthy now, but food influences cellular structure," she said, adding that "Just because you're in shape and thin, doesn't mean you're nutritionally sound."

"What bothers me is the assumptions that are being made," said Chapman.

"And yet, they don't want an advisory committee to help them," said Godzik.

Bobo said Levy made the point that the schools far exceed the state and federal standards with their menu program.

"I would put us way ahead of other schools in the state," said Levy in telephone interview. He went on to say that students have many more choices than in previous years and the school has come a long way in terms of offering more healthy alternatives. Levy said he too is concerned with the obesity of children, but even more so, the reverse problem of students not eating enough. He hopes by offering more food choices at the schools as the cafeteria has been, students will be more likely to find something they want to eat.

Typical day

On a typical day at the cafeteria, students have the choice of an entree is served with various vegetables, or made to order deli sandwiches. At the deli counter, roast beef, turkey, bologna, ham, different cheeses, lettuce and tomatoes, and a variety of breads are available. There are also special grill items, which can offer meatball subs and oven baked fries. There are also chicken patties and fish patties available, and cheeseburgers and hamburgers are sold every day. Levy said the amount of cheeseburgers and hamburgers sold has dramatically decreased this year and the amount of fat in food choices has been reduced. There are also usually two to three varieties of pizza to choose from, and a salad bar which includes both canned and fresh fruit. All meals are served with a side salad or fruit.

Levy said the schools have also changed their vending machines. The only vending machine currently in the school is one that sells low fat fudge pops, frozen yogurt, and water based items.

"We are way ahead of everyone else," he said.

Levy said the cafeteria style is modeled around a typical college campus dining hall. While he said there may still be changes to make, "I'm confident we can resolve any issues that are still out there," he said.

Godzik said he understands making menu changes to the point where students don't want to eat the school's food could be detrimental. Students may want to bring food from home, which could result in their bringing junk food, and would also cause the school to lose revenue.

Godzik said Flynn didn't feel nutrition was a topic that should be in the purview of the Board of Health. However, Bobo said Malvey didn't mind having the Board of Health set the standards for nutrition in the schools, but is afraid a nutrition committee would end up dictating what is on the menu.

But members still think something needs to be done and will not stand idly by.

"What they say is a salad is a joke," Chapman said.

Chapman said the board should still push for a junk free day once a week and they all agreed to continue applying pressure on the issue through the recently established Nutritional Advisory Committee. Chapman will write a draft of a letter to be approved by the board and sent to the School Committee to keep the issue at the forefront.

$150,000 to the schools as a one-time gift to help pay for the electricity workers used. But because construction is now nearing its end, that will not be an option this winter.

"We can't go back to that well again," said School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn.

With the help received last year, funds were able to be shifted around to cover costs but that will not be the case this year. It is estimated the expenses will be roughly the same as last year, because the buildings have increased in size and are outfitted with air conditioning for the summer months.

"The only thing we can count on is the building being buttoned up tight," said School Committee member Pat Martin.

"I'm crossing my fingers and toes," that because the building will be finished and buttoned up this winter, it will help alleviate the deficit, said Supt. Edward Malvey.

Malvey hopes the cost of utilities won't be as high as last year.

"We'll use [$260,000] as a starting point, but I'm hopeful it won't be that high," said Malvey, adding the money is critical because the school department does "not have a dollar to put into it."

However, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he isn't sure the town's budget will be able to accommodate a request of that size.

"If we give them $260,000 that puts the fiscal 2005 budget in peril," he said. Haddad told Selectmen they would need to have a meeting immediately with the School Committee to try to come up with a solution to the problem.

Because of the drastic reduction in state aid this year, Haddad said the request would probably have been one the town would have been able to grant before, but with the reduction, he's not sure what will be done.

As experience with Osgood School has shown, once a building is increased in size, the cost of utilities inevitably goes up, and this cost is something that will follow in subsequent budget seasons.

"The cost isn't going away until you close the school down," said Flynn.

New van

In addition to the help with the utilities bill, the School Department needs a new special education van and one, or possibly two, new school buses. The current van is a 1995 with 129,334 miles, and evaluated to be in poor condition. Klimko said the van is declining fast, and is a necessary part of the fleet because it is the only vehicle owned by the school with a wheelchair lift. He also said the schools might need to purchase a second bus next year in light of the grade reconfiguration.

Currently, the schools' transportation fleet includes five standard school buses, with a sixth brand new bus to be delivered sometime in October, a special education van and a micro bus. The new bus will take the place of the current Bus 3, which is a 1997 model with 85,113 miles and is in poor condition. If all goes well, Bus 3 will be used as a spare bus after the new one arrives, Klimko said.

"Last week, two buses went down on the same day," said Klimko. One had engine trouble and another had a flat tire. "We have a real good team and an amazing mechanic," which is why the potential crisis was able to be handled smoothly, he said. As an added measure, having a bus in reserve is one more way to ensure students will get where they need to go in a timely fashion.

Typically, buses put on between 3,000 and 5,000 miles in home/school transport, with additional miles put on for athletic activities and other events where the buses are rented out. The typical life span for a bus is six or seven years. School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said the local police and fire departments adhere to a purchasing schedule to make sure equipment is always up to standards and thinks the schools should have a similar plan. All members thought starting a cycle of replacement makes sense.

Because the fleet will have six buses with the addition of the new bus this month, newly elected member Rick Shea said it would make sense to replace one bus every year, starting this school year.

Shea suggested the School Committee go before the town with its request, knowing if approved, the purchase of a new bus could be deferred until spring. However, receiving the approval ahead of time gives the town adequate notice on what the schools will need and when, which gives the School Committee time to find alternatives, should funding be denied, he said.

If the schools ask for another bus, that would mean another bus driver at an additional cost of about $20,000. Flynn said the requests should come as no surprise to the town because it is a matter that was discussed two years ago. "No one can say this is news to them," he said.

Traffic light needed at train station

The MBTA recently informed Cohasset that the Massachusetts Highway Department did not think a traffic light was warranted at the Cohasset train station on Route 3A at the former Graham Waste site.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he met recently with the MBTA and Cashman Balfour Beatty (which is constructing Greenbush), and they got Bernard McCourt, District 5 Manager for MassHighway on the telephone to discuss the traffic light. The issue was taken under advisement.

"We are still fighting that battle," Haddad said. "The selectmen will not let this die."

"We are still fighting that battle. The selectmen will not let this die."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

In the meantime, state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has written to the Massachusetts Highway Department on behalf of Cohasset to urge that a traffic signal be installed at the Cohasset railroad station driveway.

"I think it is vital to the safety of commuters that a traffic signal be placed at this location," Hedlund stated. "Route 3A is an extremely busy roadway and vehicles entering and exiting the station during peak hours will be placed at risk with no traffic signal at this location," he stated.

The Cohasset Greenbush mitigation agreement requires the MBTA to provide a traffic signal at the station subject to MassHighway approval.

Haddad said state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, was also working behind the scenes to ensure the traffic light is installed.

Use of facilities to be decided

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said he will meet this week with Head of the Recreation Department Jack Worley, to discuss a possible fee for the use of the middle-high school during recreation basketball season. By charging a fee for the use of the building, it will help cover the cost of cleaning the building, which the School Committee says is necessary in order to protect the town's investment in the new building.

MacInnis keeps hitting the high notes in his music career

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When students walk into the classroom of music teacher Jack MacInnis, they are greeted by much more than musical notes and instruments. For the last 30 years, not only has MacInnis been teaching in Cohasset schools, he has been singing with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, performing all around the globe.

—TEACHERS WITH CLASS —

As a first tenor for the chorus, MacInnis has traveled extensively, singing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Because he has always had a deep love of music, the experience he gains through singing with the chorus helps keep his enthusiasm fresh, which he said rubs off on the students he teaches.

"Children are born imitators," he said, and hopes his love of music will be something the students he teaches will pick up on in his lessons. Currently, MacInnis teaches music to all of Deer Hill and third grade Osgood students.

MacInnis volunteers all the time he spends with the Tanglewood chorus, but it's not without its perks. As a member of the group, he has been invited to take part in many momentous occasions. Just last week, MacInnis sang at the opening night of Symphony Hall. He also sang at the opening of the Fleet Center in Boston; at "Pops Goes the Fourth" during the Fourth of July celebration at the Hatch Shell in Boston; at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.; numerous times in New York; and even as part of the opening exercises at the 1998 Winter Olympics in Nagano, Japan. He said he thinks some of his students know about his after-school activities because they have seen him on television.

But even though MacInnis has been a part of the chorus for 30 years, there was a time when being a member seemed like a far off dream. After graduating with a music degree from Lowell State College, now known as the University of Massachusetts at Lowell, MacInnis heard the chorus for the first time.

"I was just in awe," he said of the chorus, and thought if he could ever be a part of it, or any group like it, "That would be my lifelong dream."

MacInnis decided to audition for the chorus, and said he was shocked when he found out he made it. Auditions take place for the entire chorus every two to three years, and MacInnis keeps retaining his place.

When auditioning, MacInnis said judges aren't just looking for a good voice, but want to make sure applicants can read music as well as read and correctly pronounce words written in another language, because a large portion of the selections the chorus sings are in foreign languages. MacInnis said he sings most often in German, French and Latin, but has also been asked to sing in Italian, Russian, Polish and Czech. The group has a language coach to help with the selections, and MacInnis said he can read and pronounce certain languages as if he was fluent in them, but the only language he has ever studied is French.

Music has been a part of MacInnis' life all the way back through his elementary school years. As a young boy he took piano lessons, and went on to sing with the choir in junior and senior high school. While he said he prefers classical music to the popular music of today, "Good music comes out every year," he said.

"I do love Broadway musicals. I've been to dozens of them," he said, but admits to having his car radio tuned to the classical stations almost all the time.

However, he tries to incorporate new sounds into the classroom whenever he can, including a variety of multi-cultural sounds, to try to include something for everyone. He is sure to always provide pieces that are both vocally and content age-appropriate. MacInnis said his choice of music for the students is something parents compliment him on the most.

Perhaps the reason MacInnis is able to provide such an extensive selection of music is because he also enjoys traveling. "I've been to over 15 countries in Europe alone," he said, adding that traveling has been a wonderful learning experience for him because it has given him the opportunity to become familiar with different cultures. Because he prefers summer to winter, he said he loves to head south to warmer climates when winter is at its worst in New England. While he said he doesn't have a favorite place to visit, "The first time you go anywhere, it's exciting."

A banner day for the Cohasset Consignment Shop old Social Service League. The League's programs include domestic violence prevention, the services of a social worker, referral services, Meals on Wheels in Cohasset, and area workshops and lectures. The League also sponsors a scholarship.

Adding this dimension to the shop was a priority, says new manager Gretchen Gold, who is also a professional artist.

"I believe in supporting local artisans," says Gold. "They do so much for us – they are a gift to us."

The art, including hand-painted cigar box purses like the ones on the hit TV show "Sex and the City", adds a fresh new twist to an old shop that underwent a major upheaval this summer with the resignation of long-time manager Andi Merrill, treasurer Colleen Roth, and the subsequent exodus of a large number of volunteers, who manned the shop.

Merrill and Roth, and the League had a difference of opinion on the League's involvement with the shop, differences that could not be resolved to each other's satisfaction.

However, the new management team is looking ahead with contagious enthusiasm. Gold and assistant manager Amber Nolan have been working long hours reorganizing the floor space and taking in hundreds of new items on consignment with the help of volunteers, Emily Robinson and Dottie Fiori, who stayed on board.

The shop, which was open to consignors the last two weeks of September, reopened Oct. 1 after being closed for 10 weeks.

League president Amy Cutler said the past few weeks have been hectic but rewarding.

"It has been a real scramble these past few weeks, hiring a new staff, setting up the new computer system and rearranging and restocking the shop," Cutler says. "With the help of the board and other league volunteers and supporters, Gretchen and Amber have managed to do so much.

"It was a relief to finally open the doors last Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock for the waiting customers. Would it be terrible to admit that it was also a relief to close the doors at four that afternoon? I never imagined that there would be a line at the cash register nearly all day long. If the first few days are any indication, consignors and customers, old and new alike, are very pleased that the extended vacation is over."

League board members have been on hand doing everything from taking out the trash to brainstorming on new and exciting ways that the league can service the community, says Gold, who was intrigued by the position because the shop is non-profit and owned by the league.

"There's going to be a tremendous amount of good to the community by reopening this shop," she says. "We have a lot of ideas."

Veteran shoppers will notice a more open feeling with the reorganization of the bric-a-brac section, wider aisles between the clothing racks, and new computerized tags on all the items, thanks to a new computer system with top-of-the-line consignor software. Gift certificates are also available.

"We think that the upgrade in the computer system will make a world of difference for everyone at the shop," says Cutler. "New Board member Andrea Wade and her husband Roger donated three computers and the services of information technician, David Pinto.

"Andrea Wade and Diane Melevitch get credit for selecting the appropriate software and then customizing it. We can't thank them enough for working so hard to get it all up and running in time for the reopening," she says.

Gold says she became an avid shopper at the store shortly after moving to the area about a year ago.

"This was my very favorite store," says Gold as she points out some DKNY women's suits.

The shop now has a children's area where kids can play while their mothers shop. There's also a maternity section. Some furniture will also be available.

Another change is having consignors make appointments rather than come in at certain times and wait in line.

"We feel strongly that the appointments are a good idea," says Nolan, a self-described "stuff buff." Nolan explains appointments are more efficient, and since there are no other people waiting in line, there's no embarrassment if an item has to be rejected because it has a hole in it, for example.

Gold, who greets customers with a big smile and a friendly greeting, says the eclectic nature of the shop is a perfect fit for her varied background of retailing, marketing, and customer service.

Despite new faces and some changes, the basic mission of the shop has stayed the same.

"You'll always be able to find the $5 item here," Gold says.

She describes shopping at the Consignment Shop as a "treasure hunt." "You can buy and sell your treasures here," she says.

The shop is looking for more volunteers for all positions including knowledge and pricing of consignment items; data entry; tagging; display; and customer service. No experience necessary. Stop by or call Gold, 781-383-0687.

Mystery authors and tasty desserts

On Tuesday, Oct. 21, the Hingham Public Library and Buttonwood Books of Cohasset will present a special literary event at the library. The "Daggers and Desserts" evening will feature three top-notch mystery authors discussing their latest works, as well as a buffet of criminally delicious desserts

Featured authors will be Bill Eidson, Michelle Blake, and Tom Eslick. Eidson's latest, "The Repo," is characterized by the same hard-edged, fast-paced, and relentless suspense which have earned his earlier books a devoted following.

Michelle Blake's "Book of Light" is the third in her series featuring Episcopal priest and sometime sleuth Lily Connor, a Texas native transplanted to Boston. Like the two previous mysteries featuring Lily, this work is both suspenseful and thought-provoking, tackling issues beyond the range of standard cloak-and-dagger stories.

Tom Eslick sets his Will Buchanan mysteries at a New Hampshire boarding school where the protagonist works as a science teacher. "Deadly Kin" is the latest in the series. It combines heart-stopping suspense, a strong plot line, and a superbly rendered setting in the treacherous and beautiful mountain country of northern New England.

"Daggers and Desserts" begins at 7 p.m. in the Hingham Public Library's Whiton Room. There is no admission charge for this event, but you may be tempted not only to sample a selection of utterly decadent desserts but also to purchase one or more of these authors' enticing new books.

Please call the library reference desk to reserve your place: 781-741-1405, ext. 2608.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Columbus Day: journey to our new world

Every primary school student has at some time set sail with Christopher Columbus, braving in spirit the high seas with the hardy band of voyagers on the Nina, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria.

This week, little hands will be busy with construction paper, crayons, and glue, creating a fleet to sail across school windows and journey home in back packs to parents.

Tradition has it that in 1492 Columbus discovered America, at the same time proving that Planet Earth was round. While the news that the world is round does not seem earth-shaking today, in the fifteenth century this was a radical discovery that changed forever how men looked at their place in the universe.

Monday we celebrate Columbus Day, commemorating the discovery of the New World.

While some doubt the historical accuracy of crediting Columbus with the discovery of America — wasn't it Norwegian navigator Leif Ericson who first landed on our coastline in circa 1000? And what about Italian adventurer Amerigo Vespucci, for whom America was named? — it was this adventuresome Italian who connected America to the rest of the world.

We should honor this tradition, built on courage, vision, a new way of looking at things, and lots and lots of construction paper and glue.

We need to always be seeking what this New World stands for, continuing to always seek the truth, no matter how uncomfortable it may be, no matter how it shakes up contemporary thought.

That is the truth that will give us a new perspective on our universe.

Our personal universe radically changed when the tragic events of Sept. 11, 2001, ushered in the war on terrorism.

Today we are learning to navigate a new world. A world in which the challenge to our freedom comes not only from terrorists groups, but from the balancing act needed to keep freedom alive while giving government the sweeping powers needed to protect the country.

We are navigating a world in which we will need to devote increasing economic and technological resources in order for our democracy, our very way of life, to survive. Many families may see increasing financial hardships as the war economy evolves.

This is a war, like all wars, that will take its toll in heartache. The lives that are lost, the tears that are shed, can never be atoned for.

We all wish we could back away from this, yet turning our backs on those who make it clear that their intention is to destroy us would leave us open to additional, more disastrous, attacks.

This week, little hands will be busy reconstructing the dream of freedom in the hearts of the Pilgrims. They will be looking forward to Trick or Treat at the end of the month, Thanksgiving, and that day of all days, Christmas.

American tradition as the holidays approached has up until now been geared toward the Norman Rockwell painting of the secure and happy family seated around the bountiful Thanksgiving table.

Disturbing images have crept into that scene.

What is our new world becoming?

We are becoming a nation that is coming to grips with terrorism.

We have adapted our lives to make it less likely.

We have begun to prepare for its consequences.

Most of all, we continue to be a people who will not live in fear.

Americans have always paid the price for their freedom and always will. We will use our strength of character to live that freedom.

In fact, this very repudiation of fear increases the ability to deal with it.

"No passion so effectual robs the mind of all its powers of acting and reasoning as fear," philosopher Edmund Burke wrote.

Any terrorist act, any random act of violence, creates in its wake fear that is cold and real and deep.

But there is no need to shrink from facing conditions in our country today, any more than there was decades ago when President Franklin D. Roosevelt spoke these well-known words:

"This great nation will endure as it has endured, will revive, and will prosper. So, first of all, let me assert my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself — nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror which paralyzes needed effort to convert retreat into advance."

At these times, we are more than ever one people, united in our love of justice and freedom, ready and more than able to defend these sacred qualities.

In that is the strength to carry on.

Stop anti-train Hingham letters

TO THE EDITOR:

I continue to be dismayed that the Mariner gives so much and frequent print space to residents of lovely, "historic" Hingham. Folks such as Michael Weymouth, who do nothing but rant and rave about how Hingham will be forever changed, conveniently ignoring the fact that a generation ago, the trains served this region.

My understanding is that the majority of Cohasset residents are favorable towards the train — and many of them remember when the trains still ran. Our town appears to have a laundry list of ways to spend the mitigation funds that our town officials negotiated.

The "silent majority" has spoken. What purpose does it serve to print the endless stream of "let's save historic Hingham" articles for Cohasset residents to endure?

Historical Society thankful for support

TO THE EDITOR:

We wish to thank everyone who helped to make the Cohasset Historical Society's inaugural four-day Art Show/Fund Raiser At the Edge of the Sea such a wonderful success. On Thursday evening, Oct. 2, for the Art Preview and Reception, a sell-out crowd at the Pratt Building heard Scott Wahle, WBZ TV-4, introduce Dr. Edward T. O'Donnell, Professor at Holy Cross College, who described the 1840s Irish immigration that led to the voyage of the Brig St. John and its tragic ending. Two of the four paintings that W. K. Gilbert created on Cohasset maritime history for the show were sold that night.

At the Public Opening, Friday evening, U.S.C.G. Captain David Spillman of the First Coast Guard District Boston gave a talk on 19th century lifesaving along the New England coast and contemporary accounts of the wreck of the St. John. On Saturday, the exhibit was open to the community from 2 to 4 p.m. Sunday was a day of remembering the victims of the Brig St. John. Seamus Mulligan, WATD, broadcast from the Pratt Building, and the Cohasset High School Chorus, directed by Bryan Marks, sang Mother of Ireland, written by Cohasset's own Rik Tinory. Rita and William O'Connell of Duxbury won the raffle, a giclée print of W. K. Gilbert's The Brig St. John.

The Society's efforts benefited from the generosity of many local businesses, most notably — Aisling Gallery & Framing of Hingham; Arthur Roebuck Caterers of Hingham; Borrowed Butler of Scituate; and Curtis Liquors of Cohasset. Additional patrons and friends for the Gala weekend include Valerie Lipsett, chairperson for the events, Margy Charles, Janice Crowley, Jean Hajjar, Attorney Richard Henderson, the Hull Lifesaving Museum, Stuart Ivimey, Linda Jones, Philip Hugh Smith, Starbucks of Cohasset, and Sullivan Tire, Claire Tinory, Paula Morse, Kathy O'Malley and Nancy Gilmore.

The Art and Maritime exhibit continues through Nov. 14. Future exhibits will draw on the Society's extensive holdings of historic textiles and clothing, amateur and professional theatre archives, and other materials that reflect Cohasset's rich heritage.

Our World thanks event volunteers

TO THE EDITOR:

Despite the chilly weather, we had a great turnout at the Chariots of Ice (Cream) event at the Carousel on Sunday, Sept. 28. The event raised money for Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum which is being built in Cohasset next to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The museum will benefit families from the South Shore and beyond. It is scheduled to open September 2004.

The winner of the ice cream contest was Natalie Larsen of Hull. Her winning ice cream flavor was "Natalie's Special", a combination of white chocolate ice cream, oatmeal cookie dough & caramel swirls. Great job Natalie! Have fun with your new ice cream maker. The ice cream was made, served, and donated by Nona's Homemade of Hingham and Hull.

Special thanks to the following: The Paragon Carousel; Fruit & Jingles; Tom & Krissy Donahue of Nona's Homemade; Jean Johnson & PJ Bossey of BOC Gases; Chris Calos, Kristen Emanuello Woodley, Malee Nuesse, Sharon Haggerty, Monnie Ryan, Mary Lally, Debbie Aiken, Cindy Whelan, Beatrice Kelley & Cindy Swartwood. Our Junior Volunteer Committee Leaders: Alex Nuesse, Thomas Smith & Caroline Botelho. The countless number of Junior Volunteers: Paige Martins, Michael Smith, Maddy Lally, Nevin Lally, Luke Ryan, Isabel Nuesse, Jake Botelho, Michael Haggerty, Ned Brigham, Ben Brigham, Samantha Whooley, Kelly Garber, Carly Hayes, Jessica Woods, Jessica O'Brien, Alyse Algera, Patrick O'Loughlin, Myles O'Loughlin, Matthew Burke, Jason Burke, Brendan Calos, Jack Calos, Lauren-Paige Aiken, Paige Burns, Alexandria Burns, Charlotte Guiney, Simms Aiken, Adeline Nuesse, John Ryan, and Ethan Cassavoy.

HEALTH NOTES

Mark your calendar for flu clinics

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Viruses like flu have the ability to modify themselves. For this reason, the manufacture of a vaccine for such maladies requires a redevelopment effort and the creation of a new strain of vaccine every flu season. The health care community has experienced examples of very virulent strains of flu with high rates of morbidity in the past, and for this reason continues its program of vaccinating those who are particularly susceptible. This practice probably saves the lives of many of those who might get the disease.

This year's flu clinics will be held for seniors on three dates. Mark your calendars.

The health care community has experienced examples of very virulent strains of flu with high rates of morbidity in the past.

• The first and second sessions will be held at Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium 41 Highland Avenue on:Tuesday Oct. 14 and 21 from 10 am to 12 p.m.

• The third will be held on at the Harborview Senior Housing Community Room, 60 Elm St.(Behind the Police Station) on Thursday, Oct. 23, 2003 from 1 to 3 p.m.

These flu clinics are open to all citizens of Cohasset over 65 years and for those who are at high risk such as those with Asthma, Chronic Pulmonary Disease, Diabetes, Heart Disease. Don't forget to wear a short sleeve shirt and, if you are a senior, your Medicare Part B and your HMO Insurance Cards.

Sealed with a kiss: a century of preserving nature's bounty

COMMON GROUND

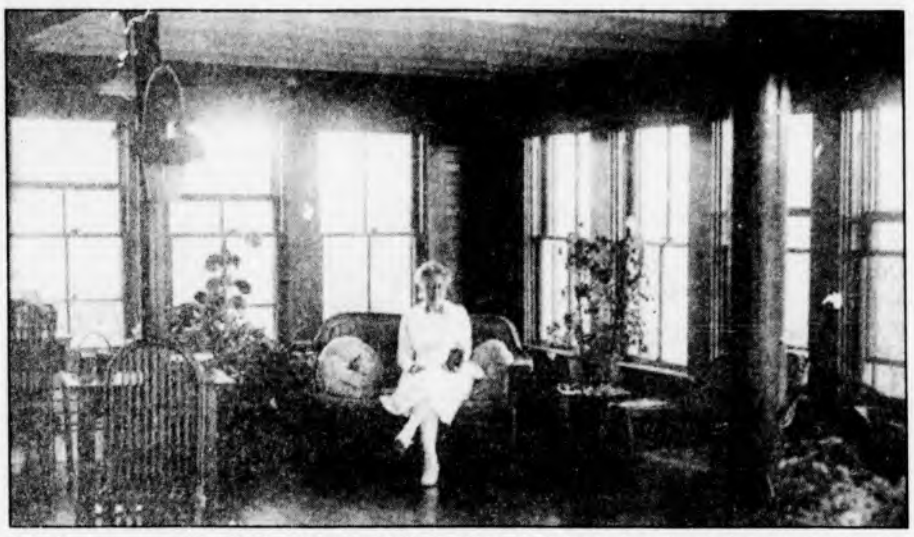
AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

It is a wonderful thing to sweeten the world which is in a jam and needs preserving.
— Thornton Burgess to Ida Putnam, 1939

Imagine yourself a traveler to the Cape Cod of a century ago. The journey is long. Your horse-drawn carriage takes you along the South Shore to the hedgerow-lined King's Highway that meanders through the village of Sandwich. You pass the sprawling salt marsh, cranberry bogs, woodlands of scrub pine and oak, and patches of tangled briar. The ocean's brine hangs in the air and its roar can be heard just off in the distance. Quaint old homes, charming inns and gift shops hunker along the dusty road. You've heard, through word of mouth, about Ida Putnam's tearoom and her homemade jams and jellies and, in need of a brief respite from your journey, you turn off the King's Highway up a narrow lane. There, atop the knoll, an 18th century farmhouse is perched at the shaded edge of Boiling Spring Pond. You know you're in the right place because the aromas of fresh fruit bubbling on the stoves lasso you before you can bring your carriage to a stop.

Little has changed at Ida's jam kitchen in the century since she began sweetening the world with her jams and jellies. The old zinc countertops have been replaced by copper, the oil lamps by electricity, the oil stoves by gas burners. But, the horseshoe that Ida nailed over the kitchen door still hangs, and utensils decorate the walls as they always did. The big bin still holds the 300 pound barrel of sugar. The recipes for jams, jellies, relishes and chutneys are the same ones that Ida perfected over the years, and the cooking is still done the old fashioned way, slow and in small batches. The Green Briar Jam Kitchen is a living museum, a place where the old ways are cherished, a place that celebrates the sensuous experience of selecting and preparing fruit and vegetables, a place that honors nature's seasonal rhythms and her bounties.

Ida Putnam was a New Yorker, born in 1872. In 1902 she inherited the family home in Sandwich and the following summer opened her tearoom. Using recipes from Fannie Farmer's Boston Cooking-school Cook Book, Ida's welcoming kitchen offered jams and jellies, breads, sandwiches, puddings and cakes. Though the tearoom ultimately failed, Ida's loyal customers continued to stop at the kitchen for jars of strawberry, crabapple, beach plum, gooseberry and blackberry preserves to take with them on their Cape Cod journey.



Ida Putnam was a New Yorker, born in 1872. In 1902 she inherited the family home in Sandwich and the following summer opened her tearoom.

In 1914, Ida named her kitchen Green Briar in honor of Thornton Burgess, the Sandwich-born writer and naturalist. It was in the Old Briar Patch, adjacent to the jam kitchen, that Burgess, as a boy, had first encountered the woodland creatures — Peter Rabbit, Sammy Jay, Jimmy Skunk, Hooty Owl, Mr. Toad and Reddy Fox — whose lives and adventures he would later chronicle in his children's stories.

The jam kitchen bustled with activity. The cooks, dressed all in white, hand-pumped water from the well, shuttled steaming kettles from burner to burner, refilled stove canisters with oil, ladled preserves into jars and, at the end of each day, scrubbed the kitchen spotless for the next day's work. The kitchen afforded local women not only employment and companionship, but also the opportunity to pass on the traditions they had learned from their mothers and grandmothers.

Always eager to add new products to her shelves, and inspired by a recipe she had found in an 18th cookbook, by the early 1920s Ida had begun experimenting with solar cooking using strawberries, cherries and peaches. Cooked on the stove with the sugar until the sugar had melted, the fruit was ladled into trays and set in greenhouse-like windows that had been built onto the kitchen. There, in their compartments, the fruit "cooked" for several days.

The Depression and war years were lean times for the kitchen, though Ida weathered the years of sugar rationing by substituting corn syrup and honey in many of her recipes. She also used more fruits from the wild that required less sugar, and eliminated many of her more sugar-intensive products. With fresh vegetables supplied by a network of local farmers, Ida introduced a line of preserved vegetables to supplement her jams and jellies. Her corn became a particular favorite. By the summer of 1947, with the dark veil of Depression and war beginning to lift, Ida's kitchen was back in full production.

When she died at the age of 78 in 1951, one of Ida's long-time employees, Martha Blake, bought the business and continued the old ways until her own retirement in the late 1970s. In 1979, the property was offered to the Thornton Burgess Society, a young environmental education center based in Sandwich. Originally, the plan was to convert the property to a nature center, but Ida's spirit — and her recipes — pointed the way for Society members who recognized the jam kitchen as a part of Cape Cod's heritage and as another way to preserve and appreciate nature. The Society began offering behind-the-scenes tours of the old-fashioned kitchen to customers and school groups. Jam workshops were added to the Society's program, with all proceeds from both workshops and the sale of preserves benefiting the Society's nature programs.

A century after Ida Putnam began sweetening the world, the colorful jars of mango chutney, sun-cooked strawberry jam with vodka, zucchini relish, salsa, bread and butter pickles, melon rind pickles, plum cranberry apple jam and beach plum jelly remain a testament to the tried and true ways, to nature's generosity, an homage to a simpler, slower time — still within reach.

The Green Briar Jam Kitchen offers adult and family jammin' workshops on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Participants make their own batch of preserves, the old-fashioned way, and take home four to six jars (8 oz) of the finished product. Upcoming workshops include Brandied Apricot and Pear preserve, Cranberry Apple jam, Cranberry marmalade, and Apple Pie jam. The Green Briar Nature Center, whose mission is to teach the lessons of conservation and appreciation, offers a full program of nature walks (trails and wildflower garden), science enrichment classes, story hours, seasonal festivals and hands-on workshops. For more information, call the Center at (508) 888-6870.

Inventing the first railroad

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

He was a street kid from Scituate, forced to become one of the breadwinners of his family after his father died when he was a youngster. But Gridley Bryant was more than that.

"Having a mechanical and inventive turn of mind, I always managed to get along comfortably," he wrote.

"I was generally at the head of the young urchins of our neighborhood, and when there was a fort to be constructed, or a cabin to be built, in our plays, I was always appointed chief engineer, by common consent, and some of our juvenile structures are still in existence."

And when he was 36 and a real engineer, for all practical purposes, the boy from Scituate invented the commercial railroad.

And when he was 36 and a real engineer, for all practical purposes, the boy from Scituate invented the commercial railroad.

On the morning of Saturday, Oct. 7, 1826, in the granite hills of West Quincy, a single horse dragged Bryant's contraption on foot-high wooden rails, topped with iron plates three miles, loaded with 16 tons of granite, to a wharf on the Neponset River.

From there, after their trip on the first commercial railroad in the United States, the blocks of granite were delivered by sea to Charlestown to become the Bunker Hill Monument.

The Boston Daily Advertiser of Oct. 9 gave this account of Bryant's engineering feat:

"The railroad, the first we believe in this country, was opened on Saturday in the presence of a number of gentlemen who take an interest in the experiment.

"A quantity of stone weighing 16 tons, taken from the ledge belonging to the Bunker Hill Association, and loaded wagons, which together weigh five tons, making a load of 21 tons, was moved with ease by a single horse from the quarry to the landing above Neponset Bridge, a distance of more than 3 miles.

"The road declines gradually the whole way from the quarry to the landing , but so slightly that the horse conveyed back to empty wagons, making a load of five tons.

"After the starting of the load, which required some exertion, the horse moved at ease in a fast walk. It may, therefore, be easily conceived how greatly transportation of heavy loads is facilitated by means of this road.

"A large quantity of beautiful stone already prepared for the Bunker Hill Monument will now be rapidly and cheaply transported to the wharf at the termination of the railroad, whence it will be conveyed by lighters to Charlestown.

"We learn from a gentleman who has visited the principal railroads in England , that it a point of solidarity and skill in construction, this is not exceeded by any one there."

Bryant, the boy from Scituate, went on to invent a long list of improvements in railroad machinery, including the eight-wheeled car, the portable derrick, the switch and the turntable, which he first employed in the granite railway in Quincy.

But, like so many inventors and pioneers, Gridley Bryant died poor at his home in Scituate at the age of 78. His last wish was to be placed in a chair so he could look out over the town he never left.

Coyote action is recommended

TO THE EDITOR:

I began to read with anticipation the Feline Hounds article about coyotes in the Oct. 2 Mariner, thinking that finally, at some administrative level, we must have come to our senses about this scourge, but no such luck.

Can it possibly be that civilization has evolved to the point that we now live in a suburban wilderness where the very best, thoughtful advice about coyotes from the authorities is to "become educated and learn to live with them", and that pets should be quarantined indoors if we want them to survive? People have been losing family pets left and right, the pets having been brazenly and methodically stalked, slaughtered and eaten by these "cunning and patient" (read "voracious") predators. Sightings increasingly occur in yards in broad daylight.

As the smaller game vanishes (I am not particularly impressed, by the way, to discover from a non-pet owner the dubious plus that the water rat population, for instance, is down this year…), the coyotes logically will continue to look for the next low-hanging fruit in the handy suburban food chain — next come domestic dogs, regardless of price tag or pedigree, and tiny humans, any of whom will surely make tasty fare. The only good news in the article is that apparently the coyotes are not, as we have been led to believe, technically a "protected species", so arguably the defense of a pet or child against an actual attack may still be an option for the lucky gun owner.

I suspect that we will have to lose a toddler out of a sandbox, or have an elderly stroller confronted, for people to wake up and wonder where our heads have been. If anyone shares this concern, they might drop a note to the paper and see if a groundswell of civilized folk can get some bureaucratic attention. Bounties, for instance…

Housing not trees, keeps seniors here

TO THE EDITOR

First of all, I want to say I love trees as much as anyone. My back yard has many trees and I think two of them may well be 100 years old. I promise to keep the. This letter, however, is not about saving trees but about Community Preservation.

Community Preservation implies many things: open space, historic sites and affordable housing. Preserving the mix of population ages is also important. Many of our seniors are going to Duxbury Village and/or Linden Ponds or just leaving because they cannot afford the upkeep and taxes on their home.

As a member of the Senior Housing Committee for a number of years under the Chairmanship of Joe Buckley, and then Jim Lagrotteria, and now Joe Nedrow, I know how we have explored all possible town sites, and have looked at senior housing complexes from Milton to Duxbury. We have brought various seasoned professionals in to speak to us about how and why and what to look for in order to develop a plan.

Now we have the opportunity with the Cook Property to provide affordable senior housing conveniently located less than a mile from the Village and 1/4 mile from the Stop and Shop. The concept is to have 42 rental units and 45 single family homes arranged in clusters similar to Pond Street or Wheelright.

At one meeting, the Committee heard extensively from Jim Shipsky about the European model of housing above commercial space. It is a very good idea that seems to be catching on and may happen eventually if zoning changes are made. In the meantime, this space of nearly 30 acres will preserve as much of the woodlands as possible to provide a buffer for the residents of Red Fox Lane and Old Pasture, and it will be 200 feet from Peppermint Brook.

In closing as a Senior who has lived here for 45 years, I am happy the Barnes property was purchased, and that the baseball, track and soccer fields are in super condition, and that the Old Paul Pratt Library was purchased by the Historical Society and that there will be two units of senior housing in it. Furthermore, I think the whole town is fortunate to have the Deer Hill, the Middle and the High School buildings renovated. Our school system is a source of great pride.

But now it is time to seize this opportunity to keep our seniors in town. I hope as many as possible will come to the meeting on Oct. 14, to attend the Presentation of the Request of Proposal for the Cook Property.

Landscaping work is much appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

The grounds at the South Shore Community Center and Cohasset Elder Affairs building at 3 North Main St. have taken on a great new look, thanks to the hard work of Kelly Landscaping. Bill Kelly and his crew have spruced up the front of the building, trimming bushes, edging the shrubbery and adding mulch around the plantings. Needless to say, our building and grounds have never looked so good! Mr. Kelly has donated all the time and mate-

Clash over who should head state pension fund

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL LEVENSON

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Gov. Mitt Romney found himself locked in another battle with the Democratic establishment — this time challenging state Treasurer Timothy Cahill over his handpicked choice to lead the state pension fund. The struggle over Steven Weddle, the Treasurer's nominee to head the pension fund, may lack the heavy political symbolism of Romney's high-profile fight with former UMass President William Bulger, but the stakes in both cases share something in common. The pension system, like the state university, plays a central role in helping to ensure the quality of life for thousands of people of modest income.

Whoever is picked to lead the fund will most likely fade into obscurity once the political battle is over, but their decisions will influence the retirement security of some 269,000 current pensioners and thousands of teachers and public employees working towards retirement. The $212,000-a-year executive director serves at the direction of a nine-member board, and strongly influences the daily management of $29 billion in assets, spreading investments out globally. Many of those investments have performed poorly in recent years.

Like other public and private pension funds, the state pension fund has endured record losses in recent years. It has been battered by investments in companies where management scandals were unearthed. And fund managers have been rethinking social and economic investment goals, proxy voting and other policies designed to ensure that the fund's investment targets are independent, open and diverse.

With so much at stake, it is not surprising that two members of the pension board here, elected to represent teachers, have broken from their constituencies' traditional alignment with Democratic circles and joined Romney in calling for an outside search for a director to replace current head James Hearty. Robert Brousseau, a retired teacher from Wareham who represents the state teachers' retirement system, spoke to The Boston Globe of his "fiduciary responsibility" to teachers in calling for an outside search. George McSherry, a retired Brockton teacher, declared his desire for an "impartial" process.

Cahill says he is confident Weddle, an investor with experience handling a $100 million fund for 11 southern African nations, is the right person to oversee the pension fund, and that he was picked after a search that considered about a dozen candidates. Weddle has been criticized because the fund he oversaw, Southern Africa Enterprise Development Fund, lost an average of 15 percent annually between 1997 and 2001. But Cahill says Weddle learned from the experience, and the Quincy Democrat believes Romney is playing politics with the pension system.

The pension system, like the state university, plays a central role in helping to ensure the quality of life for thousands of people of modest income.

"[Weddle] has all the qualifications and skills that the PRIM board needs in an executive director," Cahill's spokeswoman Karen Sharma said. "From the financial and investment background, to the skills of being an actual manager of a staff."

The last time this happened, in 2001, then Treasurer Shannon O'Brien appointed resigning executive director Scott Henderson to lead the search for his replacement. Three months later, O'Brien and the board promoted Hearty, a 10-year board member and former Lehman Brothers executive, to the post.

Weddle was nominated this August, on the same day that Cahill abruptly fired Hearty.

Romney's communications director, Eric Fehrnstrom, said Weddle may be the right choice, but members of the board have a responsibility to choose their leader only after an outside search.

"The job of executive director is arguably the most important job in state government and it's also one of the highest paid," Fehrnstrom said. "It's the governor's belief that in order to elect the most qualified individual to perform the job, there needs to a formal search process involving the widest possible" search.

The board, according to an informal Boston Globe poll, appears split on the issue, four to four, with one board member undecided. Both Cahill and Romney are said to be ratcheting up the pressure and lobbying the members. A vote was expected Tuesday, Oct. 7.

Others news on Beacon Hill this week:

• House votes to broaden DNA database — The House resumed formal sessions. Lawmakers voted 146-4 to pass a bill expanding the state's database of DNA samples to include all felons. Supporters say the measure will be of enormous importance in tacking down criminals, ruling out suspects and perhaps, in exonerating the wrongfully convicted. Gov. Romney is amenable to the measure and it appears likely to become law soon.

• Tax collections up— State tax collections during September, a heavy month for revenue, were up 5 percent or $79 million over September 2002, but the state is not yet out its economic slump, officials said. House Speaker Thomas Finneran and others have signaled that September revenues would play an important role in determining the future of supplemental spending proposals in the Legislature. Many advocates have been pushing the Legislature to stave off possible cuts in social services programs by passing an $11 million appropriation. They're undoubtedly buoyed by the fact that revenues are beating budget benchmarks by $129 million.

• Finneran to Washington House — Speaker Thomas Finneran traveled to Washington to ask members of the Massachusetts Congressional delegation if they could offer more federal aid for the home state. Finneran said he was pleased that Congress delivered about $550 million in aid this fiscal year, but he noted the state faces another giant budget gap next year.

New Water Dept. superintendent

Hugh Spurway has been appointed as the new superintendent of the Cohasset Water Department.

"We are pleased to announce the appointment of Hubert Spurway as our new Water Superintendent," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "Mr. Spurway has been appointed to this position by American Water Services, the contract operator of the Cohasset Water Department."

American Water works in partnership with the Water Commissioners to provide quality water service to the residents of Cohasset.

Spurway has more than 30 years experience in design, construction, operation, maintenance and management of water systems and treatment facilities. He is a Registered Professional Engineer in the states of Massachusetts, New York and Maine. He is a Certified T4 Water Treatment Plant Operator in Massachusetts. Spurway earned his bachelor of science degree in civil engineering from Norwich University, and completed his master's coursework at Northeastern University.

Spurway has been active in community service in Norwell in both municipal and athletic activities, and has served the Town of Norwell on both the Building Committee and the Finance Committee.

EXPAND DNA DATABASE (S 187)

House 146-4, gave near final approval to legislation requiring all convicted felons to submit DNA samples for inclusion in the state's DNA database. Under current law, only criminals convicted of 33 crimes, including murder, kidnapping and rape, are required to submit samples. Supporters said the bill would help solve more crimes by allowing police to compare crime scene DNA with a larger DNA database of convicted offenders and pointed to statistics showing that expanded DNA databases in 27 states have increased the number of convictions of guilty offenders. They noted that the expansion would also result in more innocent people being exonerated. Opponents said the bill goes too far and argued that expanding the requirement to all felons would unnecessarily include offenses like stealing poultry, hiding a motor vehicle from an insurance company, adultery and illegal clamming. They argued that the expansion should be limited and should not include non-violent felonies and noted the bill does not include adequate safeguards to prevent the government from unnecessarily sharing or misusing this genetic data. The Senate has already approved a different version of the measure and the House version now goes to the Senate for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill expanding the DNA requirement to all convicted felons. A "Nay" vote is against the bill).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

LIBRARY RECORDS OF MINORS (H 2891)- The House gave initial approval to a bill allowing parents to review the library records of any of their minor children under 18 years old. Current law prohibits any part of a library record that reveals the identity and intellectual pursuits of any person from being part of the public record. Despite this law, some librarians have adopted local policies allowing parents to look at the records of their children under 14. Sponsors of the bill argue that parents should have the right to know what books their children are reading and the name of a book when it is overdue. Opponents say the bill would threaten the privacy of teenagers who need some independence and privacy when taking out books on sensitive or confidential subjects including health and sexuality.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST VETERANS (H 1053)- The House gave initial approval to a measure prohibiting an employer from discriminating against an individual in hiring and firing practices and compensation because he or she is a veteran. The measure defines a veteran as a person who has served at least 180 days of active service in any branch of the military.

LEARNER'S PERMIT (H 215)- The House defeated a measure requiring a special "student driver" removable decal on the rear window of a vehicle being driven by anyone with a learner's permit.

DISTINCTIVE LICENSE PLATES- The House rejected several bills from various groups that wanted the state's conditional approval for the Registry of Motor Vehicles to issue distinctive license plates. The plates that were rejected included requests from groups supporting violence prevention education, preservation of open space, the Black United Fund of Massachusetts, the future of nursing, members of the U.S. Marine Crops and Rotary Clubs International. If any of these requests had been approved, the state still would not print the plates unless the group posted a $100,000 bond and received checks from 1500 drivers who committed to buying them. The plates would cost drivers an additional $40 and half the profits would go to the designated cause.

BAN STYROFOAM IN SCHOOLS (H 2407)- The Education Committee held a hearing on legislation banning the use of products made of Styrofoam or other plastic foam in the public schools.

LIMIT BALLOONS (H 1536)- A bill heard by the Natural Resources Committee would prohibit anyone from releasing more than ten helium-filled balloons outdoors in a 24-hour period. The measure imposes a $250 fine on violators. Supporters of the bill say that balloons eventually deflate and cause serious injury or death to birds and fish that swallow them.

FLU VACCINE- Seven health insurance companies joined forces to contribute $1.4 million that combined with state and federal funding would enable the state to purchase a total of 568,000 doses of flu vaccine— the same amount purchased last year. The state budget provides the same funding as it did last year for flu vaccines but the cost of a single dose of the vaccine rose from $5.90 to $7.06. Without this private funding, the state would only be able to purchase 350,000 doses. The health insurance companies include Aetna, Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts, Fallon Community Health Plan, Harvard Pilgrim Health Care, Health New England, Neighborhood Health Plan and Tufts Health Plan.

SEPTEMBER TAX REVENUES- State Revenue Commissioner Alan LeBovidge announced that preliminary September state tax revenues were up $79 million or five percent over last September and were also $21 million more than the revenue estimates used to draft this year's annual state budget. Since the beginning of the fiscal year in July, revenues have exceeded last year's collections by $159 million or 4.4 percent and were also $129 million more than the budget-drafting estimates. He noted that while corporate and business taxes were strong, withholding taxes and sales tax collections remained flat. He cautioned against excessive optimism because this flat category accounts for three-quarters of all yearly collections.

Greenbush letter was off the mark

TO THE EDITOR:

Michael Weymouth's letter in the Oct. 2 issue is a perfect example of the ignorance of the facts of Greenbush Line restoration, as expressed by the anti-train contingent. Saying that residents of the towns are "deeply opposed" to the project flies in the face of not only the non-binding referendums that were conducted during elections in the nine towns to benefit from Greenbush but also the recent poll taken by the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. Both showed residents were in favor of the rail restoration by at least a 2:1 margin. Town Meeting votes don't stand up to referenda questions, since a lot fewer people attend Town Meeting than vote. I would also like Mr. Weymouth to produce a picture of a "double-decked diesel locomotive"; the ones that he says will change Hingham so it "will never again be the same." I have ridden both of the other Old Colony lines and could not find one of these terrible, fire-breathing monsters that are supposedly going to destroy our quaint villages! The Department of Interior might have established the Lincoln Historic District in 1990 but that was six years after the proposed return of train service, so everyone, including that agency, should have had that "in mind." Hingham is getting its tunnel under the square and if people bought a house 15-20 feet from railroad tracks that were still in place, then I have no sympathy for them. Deal with it — why deny thousands of others the best alternative to driving to Boston? My take on this whole project is that the present generation wonders how those living in 1959 could have let the New Haven RR stop providing passenger service to our towns in the first place and that future generations will thank the proponents for persisting in this restoration of a vital transportation link. All aboard Greenbush!

Forums to focus on Straits Pond ecology

Through a series of public forums on the "Ecology of Straits Pond: A System Out of Balance," the Straits Pond Watershed Association plans to inform the public on management alternatives and issues for Straits Pond; solicit sufficient community input to develop a working consensus on a management plan; and present the results to the appropriate officials in Cohasset and Hull by December, 2003.

The forums will be held from 7-9 p.m. on Wednesdays.

- Oct. 15 — "What is causing the problems and ways to improve the situation" at the Louis B. Costa (Selectmen's Room) at the Hull Town Hall, 245 Atlantic Ave, Hull.
- Oct. 22 — "Things That Swarm and Things That Smell." Focus of this session will be midges and vegetation and an exploration of the options for making it better. Selectmen's Room in Cohasset.
- Oct. 29 — "Management Plan Options: Treating the Problem; not the symptoms." Louis B. Costa (Selectmen's Room) at the Hull Town Hall
- Nov. 10 — "Vision of the Next Steps." Louis B. Costa (Selectmen's Room) at the Hull Town Hall.

Forums will be carried live on town cable and re-broadcast on the other community's local cable. Check your local cable station for dates and times. For more information email viaspeech@comcast.net or visit the Straits Pond link on the Weir River Watershed Association's website: www.weirriver.org.

Schools receive their MCAS scores

The Cohasset school system has received its MCAS scores and it's no surprise to hear students are generally above the state average.

"Without question we do quite well here in Cohasset," said Curriculum Coordinator Ruth Fennessey.

Students in grades three through eight, 10, and 11 are all required to take some form of the MCAS test.

This year, 100 percent of students in grade 11 passed the language arts test, which Fennessey is thrilled about because the test is required for graduation. The class of 2003 was the first class in Cohasset which had to pass the MCAS test as a graduation requirement. Across the board, Cohasset students score fairly well in all aspects of English tests.

However, math scores were not as high, but are still much higher than the state average. Most schools in the state share the same trend and score higher on language arts tests than math.

Fennessey said when looking at the numbers, "the hard questions are the hard questions across the state," which is true for all grade levels.

The schools will continue to work hard with the students to try to cater to their math needs, but overall everyone is very pleased with the results of the tests.

"I think we're definitely on the right track," said CMHS principal Mike Jones.

How to be the 'toast' of the town

Public speaking group can help

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

For many people, getting up to speak in front of a large crowd may cause anything from a slight blush to a racing heart. However, that is not the case for Cohasset resident Sheila Sullivan, who can stand before a crowd cool and collected, while delivering an impromptu speech, which she credits to the training she has received as a member of Toastmasters.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for anyone to overcome speaking in front of people," she said, adding that parents who wants to speak at a PSO meeting, or executives planning to give a presentation, can benefit from the club's training.

Toastmasters is an international non-profit organization with clubs in 80 countries throughout the world and in many U.S. states. Their goal is to help build not only public speaking skills, but leadership skills as well. Members are able to set goals for themselves by progressing through levels of speeches, gaining valuable experience through each presentation they make.

Twice a year, once in the spring and once in the fall, speech competitions are held. Members can advance through the different stages, starting with district, then area, then eventually on to national and international competitions. Sullivan said she hasn't heard of any women ever winning the international title, and she has set that achievement as a personal goal.

To complete the first level, members must make a total of 10 speeches. Sullivan said she is "fast-tracking," doing as many speeches as she can, because she would like to pursue her interest in motivational speaking. Sullivan is currently in the process of writing a book and would like to share the story she will tell in her book with a live audience.

"I have winged eight speeches," she said, which were each 10 minutes long, but she plans on training herself to get more comfortable reading off paper, which she'll need to do when she makes her 30 minute speech. Thirty minutes is too long to speak off the cuff, she said.

At every speech, members volunteer to take on evaluation roles. Sullivan said there is even someone there to count the "ah's," "like's," and "but's." All speeches are timed and everything from giving the speech to the critique is a positive experience.

Sullivan said she heard about the club through a longtime friend, and "If I had known, I would have joined two years ago," she said. Since then, she has moved up in her number of speeches and has volunteered for the role of Vice President of Public Relations for her club.

Sullivan said people often don't recognize how favorable the job market can be for someone who can provide a professional speech, because it is something many people shy away from doing. Keynote speakers are always needed and with training from Toastmasters, as well as recognition from winning speech competitions, the monetary rewards can be great.

The club has a biyearly membership fee of between $18 and $23. Regular meetings are conducted by the "Toastmaster," twice a month, but a person can join as many clubs as they want if they would like to practice public speaking more often.

"You get more exposure by doing speeches in different clubs," she said.

Sullivan is a member of the Department of Environmental Protection's Toastmaster's club, based out of Boston, as well as the Boston Speech Party Club. She said anyone can start a club in their area, whether it be a large corporation or a mother's group, and can even follow a theme.

"In a time where communication is so important, Toastmasters offers a wonderful opportunity," she said.

In addition to public speaking, Sullivan said the people she has met have provided wonderful benefits as well.

"It's a really incredible networking opportunity," Sullivan said, adding that some of the people she has met have helped her dream of writing a book come to fruition.

Sullivan said through her participation, she has not only honed her public speaking and leadership skills, she has gained confidence as well. Being able to get up in front of a group and feel comfortable speaking is a great asset to have, she said.

While Toastmaster's clubs have not been started in Cohasset just yet, Sullivan said residents could really benefit from starting one up. Because many mothers in the area may have left corporate jobs to raise their children, she thinks it would be a wonderful way for them to get out of the house and do something for themselves twice a month. Sullivan said she would have liked to have been able to start a club up herself, but she has plans to move and wouldn't want to start something she would have to leave. However, if someone showed interest in beginning a club, "I would be more than happy to provide someone all the information they need," she said.

For more information on Toastmasters, visit the web site at www.toastmasters.org, or contact Sheila Sullivan at Sheshesullivan@aol.com.

AP Scholar Awards at Cohasset High

Sixteen students at Cohasset High School have earned the designation of AP Scholar by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement Program (AP) Exams.

The College Board's Advanced Placement Program offers students the opportunity to take challenging college-level courses while still in high school, and to receive college credit, advanced placement, or both, for successful performance on the AP Exams.

Students took AP Exams in May, 2003, after completing challenging college-level courses at their high schools. The College Board recognizes several levels of achievement based on the number of yearlong courses and exams.

At Cohasset High School, five students qualified for the AP Scholar with Distinction Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.5 on all AP Exams taken, and grades of 3 or higher on five or more of these exams. These students are Tess Foley, Laura Genello, Rachel Longley, Elizabeth Reynolds and Kimberly Ulmer.

One student qualified for the AP Scholar with Honor Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.25 on all AP Exams taken, and grades of 3 or higher on four or more of these exams. That student was Allison Moje.

Ten students qualified for the AP Scholar Award by completing three or more AP Examinations with grades of 3 or higher. The AP Scholars are Anne Barber, Erik Belz, Nell Brewer, Katherine Coyne, Lindsay Grossman, Curtis Kahn, Ian Kidder, Brittany Novak, Kaitlin Rohrer and Julie Shea.

Most of the nation's colleges and universities award credit, advanced placement or both based on successful performance on the AP Exams.

The College Board is a national nonprofit membership association whose mission is to prepare, inspire and connect students to college and opportunity. Among its best-known programs are the SAT, the PSAT, NMSQT and the Advanced Placement Program (AP).

Send in your school news

The Cohasset Mariner wants to develop a school news page to run every week. Short news items from teachers and school organizations are welcome. Photographs of events, accompanied with a short article or longer story are also sought. If you have "Stars of the Month", an interesting program or student volunteer effort, artwork, student writings, interesting field trip, or special projects, please share them with us.

Cohasset's Ton Truglia wraps up Cardinal Spellman ballcarrier during Saturday's messy 8-6 win for the Skippers

Joy in Mudville

Cohasset gridders fend off Cardinal Spellman, sloppy field to stay perfect

The Skippers improved to 3-0 on the season with a road victory over the Cardinal Spellman Cardinals Saturday by the score of 8-6.

With a midday period of heavy rain turning the Spellman field into a slippery mud bowl, the opposing coaches knew their teams would have to eliminate turnovers in order to come out on top. Cohasset had no turnovers to the Cardinals two.

Junior defensive back Joe Durkin forced a fumble by the Cardinals with a hard hit, as did senior captain linebacker Tony Truglia. Both turnovers gave the ball to the Skippers, with senior defensive end Rob Carpenter and junior middle linebacker Matt Casey making the recoveries.

The Skippers defense took advantage of the poor field conditions, and the knowledge that Spellman likes to run the ball on virtually every down, by gang tackling on every play. Casey, Truglia and senior captain defensive back Chris Bilodeau all had double digits in tackles, with Durkin adding eight and junior defensive end Kelvin Ferriera seven. Junior DB Crandon Leahy and junior defensive tackles Leo Clougherty and Matt Baroudi all recorded season highs for tackles, with junior D J Silvia (playing both ways, had a 14 yard reception from his receiver slot) and senior Sean Connolly coming up from their defensive back positions to chip in with another six tackles between them.

Overall, the Cohasset defense forced Spellman to punt three times, turn the ball over twice by causing fumbles, and to attempt a futile field goal from 42 yards out on the final play of the game after a long and time consuming drive which started at the Skippers 27 yard line.

Cohasset's offense was limited to 117 yards, as the field

Field hockey knocked back to .500 in loss to Mashpee

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

Exactly halfway through the field hockey season, the girls have opened the door towards the playoffs. The big question remains: will they walk through the door? We'll see if they can at least match their 4-4 record in the eight remaining games.

In a true nail biter, Friday, a relentless Mashpee squad squeaked by the Lady Skippers, 1-0.

"The Cohasset girls dominated the play through most of the game," asserted Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick. "Unfortunately, the Mashpee girls capitalized on one small communication error with 1:23 left on the clock. What a heartbreaker!"

Using her three years of goaltending experience and natural quick reaction time, Caitlin Condon knocked away the shots that came her way. Sweeper Rachel Doyle provided great leadership in setting the defensive strategy, assisted by Tess Foley, Kelly Hurley, Frannie Noble, Carling Sturino and

Inconsistent lady booters stuck two wins under .500

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

The up-and-down season for the Cohasset girls soccer team continues.

The girls split their games last week against South Shore League foe Mashpee and non-conference Holbrook.

The week got off to a promising start on Tuesday, as the Skippers defeated Mashpee, 2-0. This was the rematch of a Sept. 10 battle, in which Cohasset battled from behind to earn a 3-3 tie.

Last Tuesday's game was scoreless until the 68th minute, when senior Sarah McMorris scored off of a pass from Jenn Buckley.

McMorris has been one of head coach Deb Beal's top offensive threats in recent weeks. Her goal against Mashpee was her third in five games, as she now ranks second on the team in goals, behind Jenn Buckley's four.

Midfielder Rachel Garber gave Cohasset an insurance goal in the 80th minute, as she scored on a beautiful one-touch in front of the net.

It was one of Cohasset's finest

No excuse accepted

CHS boys soccer coach not happy with his team's recent play

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Many coaches might have cut the Cohasset boys soccer team a break after a narrow 2-0 escape over a clearly inferior Mashpee team.

The ready-made excuses were there, after all, for the Skippers (7-2, 6-2): several players were dinged up, strange things regularly happen on the other side of the Cape bridges and the team was coming off a disheartening loss to Norwell in the showdown for first place in the South Shore League.

First year CHS boys coach Rob Leary, however, is not like "many coaches". In his mind, there are no excuses for a performance as poor as his team put on Tuesday afternoon. In short, he doesn't want to hear it.

"We just played awful, pure and simple," asserted Leary, the former head boys soccer coach at Rockland High.

When asked about a possible letdown in the wake of the games of the year, with Mashpee being the best team they have beaten thus far. Beal was pleased with her team's effort after the game.

"The girls had fun and I think were able to put the [previous week's] Carver disaster out of their minds," she said.

Cohasset had lost to Carver, 4-2, on Sept. 29, giving up two goals late in the game.

Thursday's game was a different story for the Skippers, as they lost a tough, defensive struggle to Holbrook, 1-0.

Beal was optimistic before the match, saying that the state tournament is within the girls' grasp.

"[The win over Mashpee] was big; it takes a little pressure off us down the stretch," she said. "We still need to win the big ones, but we have a little breathing room. I am confident that we can get into the tournament again, and I know that it is what the girls are working towards."

At the same time, Beal was not looking past the 4-1 Bulldogs, despite Cohasset's success against them last year.

"They run an offsides trap that we need to adjust to, so it will be interesting," she said. "I do hope we can adjust quickly enough and not wait until the end of the game to wake up."

Unfortunately for the Skippers, Holbrook's defense was a little too stingy, and Cohasset could not put the ball in the back of the net.

Fortunately, the Lady Skippers got back on the winning track with a thrilling 3-2 victory over SSL rival Abington this Tuesday. Junior forward Casey Anderson scored the only goal of the second half to break a 2-2 tie, as she hooked a shot far post, top corner to improve Cohasset to 4-6-1 (4-4-1 in SSL play).

It's been a roller coaster season of sorts for Cohasset. After a tough start, the team had a two-game winning streak two weeks ago, with victories over Harwich and Hull. Since then, however, the team has gone 2-3.

That record places Cohasset nine points shy of the necessary 18 for a postseason berth. Wins over Hull, Harwich, Cape Cod Academy twice and Holbrook in the rematch would give the Lady Skioppers the points they need to qualify for the state tourney a second straight year.

However, the margin of error is thin, the other two games pitting the Skippers against Carver and Scituate, both of whom they've already lost to this season. The Skippers played Carver at home yesterday and will travel to Harwich tomorrow.

Coastal Stars Report

The Coastal Stars Squirt "B1" team got off on the right foot Saturday, with a 5-0 win over Norwood in their season opener.

The Stars withstood some early pressure from Norwood and began to carry the play midway through the first period as the entire team skated hard, moved the puck well and won the battles along the boards.

Bobby Parelli scored the first goal of the season, tucking in a rebound, with assists from John Kenney and Neil Conway. Moments later, Mike Carbone went hard to the net and wristed a loose puck past the goalie to give the Stars a 2-0 lead. Ross Horan assisted on the goal.

The Norwood goalie kept it close in the second period, making several good stops, including one on Center Carter Denton, who played a strong two-way game. Defenseman Bobby Harrington picked up the only goal of the period as he moved in from the right point and his shot found the back of the net. In the third period, Parelli and Carbone secured the win with their second goals of the game, both putting home loose pucks in front of the Norwood net. Ryan Talanian tallied his first point of the season with an assist on the Carbone goal.

The defensive pairings of Brian Ford with Harrington and DJ Evans with Jared Coletta controlled their end of the ice throughout the game, keeping the front of the net clear and moving the puck quickly out of their zone. They only allowed a handful of shots on goal, and goalie Danny Durkin handled them all, earning the shutout.

The Squirt C3 kicked of their season Saturday with a 7-3 victory against Pembroke.

After falling behind 1-0, Willy Brown notched the first goal of the season with a hard shot from the right slot.

Shortly before the end of the 1st period Mike Masciulli gave the Stars their first lead by swooping in and cleaning up on a loose puck in front of the net.

The 2nd period was all Stars as Defenseman Justin Hendriksen threw the puck up the left boards to a streaking Brown who notched his 2nd score of the game.

With one minute to go in the period, Winger Sam Labo fed Masciulli who slammed home his 2nd from in front of the net.

Netminder Alec Hurd was stellar between the pipes as he turned away at least a dozen shots in the second period including a Pembroke breakaway.

Despite the Stars 4-1 lead, there was no quit in Pembroke as they converted two quick goals to start the 3rd period.

At this point Wingers Ally Ryan, John Sinkins, and Nick Craig got their second wind and crashed the offensive boards, continually throwing the puck in front of the Pembroke net. Center Vinny Calorio converted one of these passes, lifting the puck just under the cross bar for his 1st goal.

The defensive tandems of Ryan Foohey with Mike Foley and Mike Timcoe with Hendriksen, instrumental in keeping most the play in Pembroke's end of the ice, stiffened up and kept the puck away from the Stars net for the remainder of the period.

Masciulli saved his best for last, combining stickhandling and hustle to score his 3rd and 4th goals and secure a Stars victory.

conditions made rushing the ball and throwing on the run a challenge all afternoon.

On the Skippers second possession of the game, which started at their own 30 yard line, senior tailback DeWayne Morris carried three times for 18 yards. With the help of a Cardinal Spellman penalty, the Skippers moved into Spellman territory.

From the Cardinals 42-yard line, senior QB Mike Dooley rolled right, with pulling sophomore guard Nick Arment providing the escort, and, with his primary receiver covered Dooley, found senior fullback Tony Truglia over the middle. Truglia hauled in the pass and rumbled down to the one foot line for a 41 yard gain. After a loss on a rush attempt and an incomplete pass, the ball sat on the 4-yard line. The third down call was a rollout pass to the left. Dooley started left and ran into a swarm of Cardinal defenders, he reversed direction and sprinted around the right side and dove into the end zone for his second rushing touchdown of the season. Truglia took the two-point conversion handoff and followed right guard captain Steve Davis, center Casey, and sophomore right tackle Dan McCarthy into the end zone, and the Skippers had an 8-0 advantage with just over eight minutes left in the first half.

Spellman would score on their second possession as well, starting at their own 35 yard line, culminating with a Mike Hinkley 29-yard touchdown rush. The all important conversion rush attempt failed as eleven Skippers met Hinkley head-on at the 1-yard line. The score stood at 8-6 Skippers with 2:44 to go in the first half.

The second half was uneventful from an offensive standpoint, as neither team reached the red zone.

Kudos to:

Joe Durkin, who had a nice afternoon punting the ball for the Skippers, especially considering the muddy field conditions

- Bilodeau, in addition to his 11 tackles and a leaping pass reception, the senior had several nice punt returns.

- Davis bullied through from his defensive tackle position and stopped a crucial Spellman rush for no gain on the final play before the field goal attempt at the end of the game.

- Junior Brendan Michaud provided fine pass protection from his fullback slot.

- Senior left tackle Dan Tarpey halted a long punt return by the Cardinals with a crushing sideline tackle.

- The Cheerleaders for their enthusiastic support throughout the game.

At the right wing position, Jessie Guild cleared and drove very well. At the forward line, teammates Kristin Howard and Courtney Caron launched several power shots triggering excitement among the onlookers.

"We couldn't have asked for a more evenly-matched game," Kristen Howard reflected after the game. "Every single player on our team played their best and made great contributions."

The Skippers also steered much of the credit towards their coach, Deb Bostwick.

Said Jessie Guild: "The coach has given us some key instruction in passing skills, communication, and shooting in the corners."

Rachel Doyle added: "She encourages us to back each other up and to polish our stick skills."

Other teammates referred to Coach Bostwick, now in her 14th year, as "devoted" and "very nice to us".

Looking ahead, the team must finish with at least a .500 record to qualify for the state tournament. When asked who could spoil their chances, many of the girls warily mention Harwich, Hingham, Carver and Mashpee.

Coach Bostwick admires the girls' ability to maintain both composure and intensity throughout the game. She also points out they need to improve upon finishing their shots.

"The girls recognize they will only get what they put in at practices," said Bostwick. "If they keep working hard, we have a fair chance at states."

Let's hope the girls will meet and exceed their expectations in the days ahead.

The Skippers' junior varsity broke into the win column on Thursday afternoon with a 26-6 victory over Cardinal Spellman's junior varsity. Their record stands at 1-2. They play tonight at Carver with kickoff at 5:30.

Last year the Skippers prevailed in the rain at Carver 7-6. CHS boys soccer coach not happy with his team's recent play

Norwell loss, the Skippers coach shot back "You don't have a letdown after you get your head handed to you. That's supposed to fire you up."

All the scoring in the Mashpee game was provided in the first half. Senior John Andrade scored 20 seconds in and junior Kevin Dinsmore made it 2-0 midway through the frame.

The Skippers didn't do much worth mentioning offensively after that, according to the coach, and a couple of defensive breakdowns almost cost them big. Senior keeper Jesse Brewer was twice forced to stop shots off clean break-ins in the second half to preserve the shutout and win.

"At least Jesse came up big," noted the coach solemnly. "Jesse's been playing very well. Other than him, though, no one's shown much consistency."

Clearly, Leary is concerned. He insists, however, that he is far from panicky.

"We just need to snap out of this funk, and get back to playing the way we're capable of playing," he said.

The CHS boys are currently in the midst of their longest stretch of off days during the season, seven days. As far as the first year head coach is concerned, the break couldn't have come at a better time.

"We've got some guys who are a little banged up, and can use this stretch to get healed up a little," said Leary over the weekend. "It also gives us a chance to work on some things in practice. We'll find out next week, though, whether this rest was a good thing."

The Skippers were able to right the ship somewhat with a 2-0 win over SSL rival at home Tuesday.

Cohasset's Sam MacDonald (white shirt) tries to step around Ryan Henry in recent SSL tilt. Sam was mistakenly identified in this picture last week as Andrew Wise.

They got right back to it last night, travelling to Carver for a huge showdown with Carver, a game that may well determine second place in the SSL. The Skippers snuck by the Crusaders at home last month, 1-0, on a late goal from Andrade. However, the Crusaders, who like the Skippers have just two losses in SSL play, are coming off an emotional 2-0 win over previously unbeaten on Norwell Monday.

At 8-2, the Skippers need to win just one of their remaining nine games to qualify for the state tourney for a fourth straight season. However, with games upcoming against Carver and tough non-league opponents Hingham (Oct. 20), Hanover (Oct. 16 and 24) and Coyle-Cassidy (Oct. 27), Leary insists he is taking nothing for granted.

"Considering the way we played last week, I'd say nothing is cast in stone," said Leary. "I think we can be a pretty good soccer team and play a lot better than this. How we do against Hingham, Hanover and Carver will tell a lot. Those games need to bring out the best in our players."

Too little, too late

Heartbreaking loss to Norwell knocks CHS golfers out of postseason chase

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A spirited late season run by the Cohasset High golf team went for naught, as the Skippers lost a heartbreaker to league rival Norwell Tuesday to kill their postseason hopes.

The loss, decided by play on a single hole, dropped the Skippers to 5-8-1, making it impossible for them to achieve the all-important .500 mark needed for playoff qualification.

The Cohasset boys put forth a valiant effort, though, playing on the Clippers home Hatherly Country Club course, coming much closer to topping the perennial South Shore League powerhouse than they did on their own Cohasset Golf Club course two weeks ago.

Junior Jack Carroll, playing out of the number four spot, was Cohasset's low man on the tricky par 35 course, scoring a 40 for nine holes.

The Skippers had kept their slim playoff hopes alive with a pair of wins last week over Quincy and Carver.

In a non-league meeting last Wednesday with Quincy at the Cohasset Golf Club, Tim Pilczak was the medallist, shooting a 39 to pace the hosts to a 33-21 win. Carroll chipped in with a solid 42.

Senior Mike Devine was the medallist for Cohasset 24 hours later at Southers Marsh in Plymouth, shooting a 4-over-par 36 to lead the Skippers to a narrow 28-26 win over SSL rival Carver. Freshman Kevin Barber chipped in with a 37.

The Skippers will wrap up the season today at Cohasset Golf Club with the second half of a two day home-and-home series with Cape Cod Academy (they were on the Cape yesterday).

Historical Society remembers Brig. St. John

Hosts open house in new home

Photos/Robin Chan

Historical Society treasurer Jim Laughlin and Valerie Lipsett, who chaired the fundraising event, stand by a painting of the Brig St. John by W. K. Gilbert. Victims of the Brig St. John disaster were remembered at the open house.

Middle-high school choral director Bryan Marks leads the students sing "Mother of Ireland," a song by Rik Tinory memorializing the Brig St. John. The event was part of the historical society's 75th anniversary weekend at its new home, the Paul Pratt building.

Society co-presidents Kathy O'Malley and Paula Morse are interviewed by WATD's Seamus Mulligan, who provides a historic narration on Tinory's "Mother of Ireland" CD.

Katie Jensen inspects a model of the Brig St. John during the historical society's open house. The exhibit "At the Edge of the Sea," showed the strong maritime history of the town.

Pumpkins sale to raise money for ASP

Each year since 1988 a group of teens and adults from Cohasset has taken a one week trip to some of the poorest areas of this country to volunteer to do badly needed home repairs. The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project expects to send 120 teens and 55 or more adults on the next trip now being planned for June of 2004. This makes the Cohasset group the largest participant in the national Appalachia Service Project, coordinated out of Johnson City, Tenn.

All participants in the annual trip must also participate in the preparation for the trip. In addition to a series of workshops designed to prepare the teens and adults for the rigors of the trip, the group must raise the funds needed to make the trip possible. This year a new fundraising project has been added. The group plans to transform the open field at the entrance to Wheelwright Park on North Main Street in Cohasset into a Pumpkin Patch. The pumpkins are grown in a cooperative venture with the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico.

Plans are underway for Story Hours in The Patch, visits from "The Great Punkin", as well as many other exciting activities. The Patch will officially open on Saturday, Oct. 11, and will be open daily from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. through Halloween (Friday, Oct. 31).

Miki makes her mark on 'Ballyhoo'

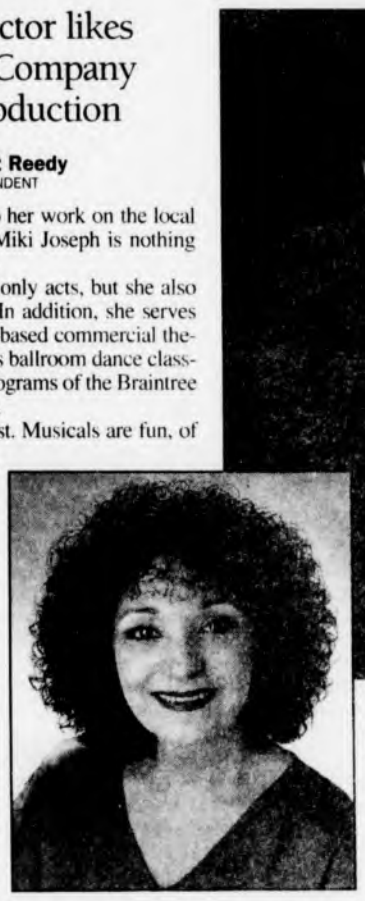
Quincy director likes message of Company Theatre production

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When it comes to her work on the local theater scene, Miki Joseph is nothing if not versatile.

The Quincy resident not only acts, but she also directs and choreographs. In addition, she serves as an assistant to a Boston-based commercial theater press agent and teaches ballroom dance classes in the adult education programs of the Braintree and Quincy public schools.

"I like directing plays best. Musicals are fun, of course, because of the songs and the choreography, but with plays there is more time for character development," explained Joseph by telephone last week.



These days, Joseph is happy to be at the helm of the Company Theatre's production of "The Last Night of Ballyhoo" which opens in Norwell this week. Written by Alfred Uhry — who provided a memorable look at changing race relations in the South with his Pulitzer Prize-winning play "Driving Miss Daisy" — "Ballyhoo" earned the 1997 Tony Award for Best Play and marked its author's return to his Georgia roots for a bittersweet comedy set in Atlanta on the eve of World War II.

The cast of "The Last Night of Ballyhoo."

(Left) Actor, choreographer and Director Miki Joseph is now at the helm of the Company Theatre Production of "The Last Night of Ballyhoo" on stage through Oct. 26.

As the story unfolds, it is Christmas 1939, the film "Gone With the Wind" is having its world premiere, and Hitler is invading Poland. Meanwhile, a segment of Atlanta's Jewish elite is more concerned with who will be attending Ballyhoo, the social event of the season. The arrival of a handsome stranger from New York forces the Freitag family to deal with who they really are as they are pulled apart and eventually drawn back together.

"This particular Southern family may be Jewish, but they also put up a Christmas tree each year and aren't known to light even a single candle. They are prejudiced in their own right. They belong to a club that only allows German Jews and not those from Poland or anywhere else," Joseph points out.

"A new employee, Joe, comes to work for the Freitag family company and eventually falls for the boss' niece. He even invites the young woman to accompany him to the Ballyhoo at the Standard Club, even though he is not German. Joe's presence leads the family to an awakening of understanding concerning their Jewish faith.

"Calling on the range of personal experiences found in her seven person cast of local actors,

Joseph was able to explore prejudice on many levels.

"At our very first read-through, we talked openly about the various forms of discrimination we had,each experienced in society. The message of this play can really be applied to any minority group. Ultimately, this is a warm family story of love, pride, and acceptance. When I first read it, I am not sure I appreciated it as much as I do now. The play is all about taking pride in yourself, whoever you are."

Joseph can take pride in a career that has seen her act with the well-respected Sugan and Zeitgeist Theater Companies of Boston and direct musicals and plays on the South Shore from North Quincy to Duxbury.

"I really prefer directing, mostly because I love helping actors explore and analyze their characters," she says." I also like audiences to leave with a life-affirming message like the one found in 'Ballyhoo.'"

("The Last Night of Ballyhoo" will be performed at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, through Oct. 26. For tickets and information, call 781/871-2787 or visit www.companytheatre.com.)

Millie's thoroughly charming

The musical comedy "Thoroughly Modern Millie" may take place at the height of the jazz age, but one of the stars of the show's current national tour sees its message as the perfect antitode for today's uncertain times.

"With everything that is going on today, we just need things like this that can make us laugh and feel good," explained Pamela Isaacs by telephone last week from Buffalo. "The story is very sophisticated, light and fun so it's easy to just sit back and forget all your troubles."

Based on the 1967 film of the same name, the 2002 Tony Award-winning Best Musical tells a tale of "moderns," including a flapper named Millie Dillmount, who bob their hair, raise their hemlines, and enter the workforce all while rewriting the rules of love. Choreographed by Rob Ashford and directed by Michael Mayer, the show features music from its movie namesake as well as nine new songs by Jeanine Tesori, with lyrics by Dick Scanlan.

In "Millie," Isaacs plays socialite Muzzy Von Hossmere — a character a world away from the streetwalker she portrayed so movingly in the Cy Coleman musical "The Life," which earned her a 1997 Tony Award nomination. "Muzzie is full of life and fun and just a woman with a great big heart. She married probably one of the richest men in the world and is the toast of New York society. I originally auditioned for this role in the Broadway company and I've wanted to do it ever since. There are very few parts for a woman as good as this one."

"Thoroughly Modern Millie" is at the Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont Street, Boston, through Sunday.

Helen's celebrates 65 years in the Landing

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The year was 1938. The "Long Island Express Hurricane" blew through the region and racetrack legend Seabiscuit was riding high. Benny Goodman's Big Band was jazzing up Carnegie Hall and a little place called Helen's Café opened its doors in Weymouth Landing.

Sixty-five years later, Helen's is still going strong. John Mavrides, 52, and his wife, Rita, are the second-generation owners of the 58-seat bar and restaurant and neighborhood landmark, having taken over 17 years ago. John's parents, the late Catherine and William Mavrides, bought the bar in 1938 and opened for business in Braintree, October 2 of that year.

In celebration of such remarkable longevity, the Mavrides's are holding special-night and ongoing events at Helen's or under the bar's sponsorship throughout the anniversary month. It's all within the efforts of what the owners say is the policy that has sustained Helen's for six-and-a-half decades — to give back to the community.

"This is a real neighborhood bar with a real neighborhood-type feel," said Rita Mavrides, who does most of the hands-on management at Helen's. "Everyone knows everyone here, and we support our customers just as they support us. It actually is a lot like Cheers."

"Even in the time since John (Mavrides) and I took over, everything in the Landing has come and gone except Helen's," Mavrides added.

So who's Helen? Actually, no one knows. The property was called Helen's Cafe when the original Mavrides's bought it, and the name was simply kept to avoid confusion.

Catherine and William Mavrides had been in the restaurant business, with a location in Wrentham, when they

The cheese course 101

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

In the 1980s, I made a mini-tour of the great restaurants of France and was reminded of the gravity with which the French regard cheese as an essential part of dinner. The cheese carts, even in small out-of-the-way country inns, had three levels and displayed at least two dozen varieties. Even in Boston, expatriate French neighbors of mine still regard cheese as essential as wine for a complete dinner. Wondering if, in fact, most of us here in America were missing something, I set out to give myself a quick cheese education.

The first, most obvious, fact about a cheese course is that it requires no preparation or cooking. In my book, that's a good enough reason to serve it three times a day. It should be served after the main course either before or instead of dessert. Wine is essential, as is good bread, preferably a warmed baguette. (You can crisp up a baguette in a 375-degree oven for seven minutes.) I avoid sourdough or "organic" baguettes like the plague – they tend to be heavy. A real Parisian baguette has a shatteringly thin crust and a light, pillowy interior. The bread ought not to compete with the cheese. Although most books tell you to serve thinly sliced baguettes (and some suggest toasting the bread), a real French family simply passes the loaf around and everyone takes a hunk. That works for me, too.

Cheese is made from milk from three types of animals: cow, goat and sheep. It is a good idea to get at least two varieties just to mix things up a bit. Don't feel pressed to offer one of each (as some experts recommend.) The folks I spoke to suggested 1 1/2 ounces of cheese per person and five to six different cheeses is about right with three being a bare minimum. (Since cheese holds well in the refrigerator and our family eats it frequently, I don't ever consider the notion of portions. I just put out whatever is left.) Most cheese experts suggest selecting one cheese as a "set piece" – the cornerstone of the plate. It should be something everyone will like, which means relatively mild and probably harder than softer. In terms of serving, start with the mild, soft cheeses (a fresh goat cheese, for example) and work up to the harder, more aggressive cheeses such as a Stilton. Cheese has to be at room temperature before serving.

Almost everyone suggests serving fruit with cheese – apples, grapes, figs, etc. –, which I think, is optional. However, if the cheese course is to replace dessert, then fruit makes sense. In terms of wine, there are no rules. (You can simply keep drinking whatever you served with the main course.) My only suggestion is the dessert wines (which are horrible with sweet desserts) work very well with blue cheeses. They are worth a try.

Here is a quick guide to the key points:

- Plan on 1 1/2 ounces of cheese per person.
- Choose a set piece — usually something hard, mild and very interesting – as the cornerstone of your cheese plate.
- Based on the set piece, make other selections of varying tastes and textures. Try to include at least two of the three basic types: cow, goat and sheep.
- Plan to serve at least three but no more than six cheeses.
- Serve the lightest cheese first and progress onto the heaviest cheese last.
- Allow the cheese to come up to room temperature before serving, at least fifteen to twenty minutes out of the refrigerator.
- Serve the cheese with oven-crisped baguettes (375 degrees for seven minutes) and fruit, if you like (apples, grapes, figs, pears or peaches).
- This is one of the few times a dessert wine makes sense – serve it with a blue cheese.

expanded to Braintree by opening Helen's sixty-five years ago. William additionally owned and trained thoroughbred racehorses.

Catherine also became the original Helen's bartender, especially notable in those early years when there were few women bartenders and Helen's itself did not permit women to drink at the bar, separating them behind a partition at tables in the rear section.

Celebrations at Helen's so far have included last Thursday's actual 65th birthday, and a special of the bar's normally $4.75 pizzas for 65 cents. More than 1,000 pizzas were sold out of Helen's kitchen from 11 a.m. through closing time.

The following evening, more than two dozen former and current bartenders of Helen's, plus many longtime patrons, packed the bar for an anniversary reunion. Some offered their thoughts and recollections.

"This is a very unique bar in that it always makes you feel at home," said Leigh Donelan, 45, of Weymouth, who worked the bar from 1988 to '91. "And it's always incorporated both young and old clienteles."

"This was a fun place to work," said John Molignano, 50, of Randolph, barkeep from 1982 to '86. "But it also could be kind of a tough place. I remember the old men regulars who had a shot and a beer, faithfully, everyday. And then there were the bikers who would come in occasionally, and they always helped keep the peace."

Saturday will bring Comedy Night at 8:30 p.m. featuring headliner P.J. Walsh, along with area standup comics Annette Pollack, Joe Holden and others. The evening will also feature T-shirt giveaways to local youth sports teams, which Helen's Café regularly supports.

Since last year's smoking ban took effect, Helen's Café has been hosting live entertainment to help draw customers. Comedy Nights are featured monthly on the second Saturday, and open-mic blues jams have taken place weekly on Thursday. The Mavrides feel fortunate they've been able to keep the family business thriving through good times and bad and amid so many changes.

"Especially in these days of smoking bans, the bad economy and businesses going under, we feel very lucky to have kept this bar going and stay alive as a business," said Rita Mavrides.

Planting projects for the fall season

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Darkness had fallen by the time I managed to make preparations to contend with the weatherman's predictions for a series of potentially killing frosts. I scurried about the gardens in a minor state of panic, hoping to preserve tender tropicals, vegetables and containers for the weeks and months to come. Decorative pots, large and small, overflowing with spectacular specimens of geraniums, coleus, lantana, sweet potato vines and dozens of delectable annuals were hauled into the garage and sunroom. Plastic bags were stuffed with dozens of clippings and as a last minute precaution, entire plants of coleus, salvia, and impatiens were lifted and potted. Tender vegetables, herbs and perennials were covered with sheets and pieces of burlap to prolong their growth.

Since the average killing frost in my garden varies only slightly from year to year, with an average date of October 10, I had focused on weeding and planting in recent days, convinced that there would be plenty of time to secure these frost-sensitive plants. The weatherman's frost advisory so early in the month caught me slightly off guard, but I have learned to heed even the slightest hint for icy chills since my low-lying, open microclimate often experiences a killing frost weeks before other gardens in our surrounding neighborhood. Although temperatures dropped into the thirties, no frost damage was apparent the following day. More frosty evenings are in the forecast for the upcoming week, however, forcing me to accept that the time has come to complete planting projects and begin putting the gardens to bed for this season.

As I lifted plants of coleus from both sunny and shady borders, I was discouraged to discover just how dry the soil was throughout my gardens. Despite the prolonged dampness of the spring and summer months and torrential downpours in nearby communities in recent weeks, my own gardens have not been the beneficiary of these scattered showers. My lawn, shrubs and perennials were beginning to show signs of drought stress prompting me to haul hoses and sprinklers to moisten the parched earth for several consecutive days.

Although most plants are entering a dormant stage, their root systems will continue to absorb moisture and nutrients until the ground freezes solid. Water is especially critical for new lawns, trees, shrubs, bulbs and perennials planted this fall and for broadleaf evergreens whose foliage will be subjected to sun and desiccating breezes. A hose should be allowed to trickle at the base of recently planted trees and shrubs until the entire root ball has been soaked. Supplemental watering should be provided for all plants until Thanksgiving if Mother Nature does not provide to ensure their survival through the harsh winter months.

As I hauled my hoses across the lawn, I recognized the telltale digging of skunks in several areas indicating the presence of grubs. Although rarely a problem in my moist, clay soils, neglect and dry conditions seem to have enabled these hungry little beetle larvae to develop a sizable population sufficient to invade a broad patch of turf. If time permits, I may apply Dylox to the affected areas followed by a copious amount of water in an effort to eradicate these pests before cooler temperatures drive them deeper into the soil. While I am usually adverse to chemical applications, Dylox tends to dissipate in little more than a week and if left untreated, the grubs will continue to feed next spring requiring a major lawn renovation. Applications of grub controls containing Merit will be ineffective for treating existing grubs at this time of year or in early spring and should be applied as a preventative measure during the latter half of the month of June.

Autumn is the preferred season to transplant or divide herbaceous peonies. (Herbaceous peonies die to the ground each season unlike their cousins the tree peonies that are grafted, woody shrubs.) These long-lived perennials rarely require division but are easily propagated should you wish to establish new clumps. Plants which fail to produce flower buds may be planted too deeply, receive insufficient sunlight or may be starved of nutrients due to excessive root competition from nearby plants or soil depletion over many years. Lift the entire clump and air dry until the soil can be carefully brushed away from the treelike roots to reveal their reddish-pink buds, referred to as "eyes". Use a sharp knife to produce divisions containing at least 3 to 5 eyes to ensure flowering the following spring.

Peonies prefer a deep, rich, well-drained loam generously amended with organic matter. The addition of superphosphate will promote a strong root system and maximize flower production. They perform best in sunny locations but can tolerate light shade. Planting depth is critical to ensure blooms in subsequent years. The pink eyes should be facing upward at a depth no more than 1 to 2 inches below the surface. Gently tamp the soil and water well. Apply a light, airy mulch in December after the ground freezes to prevent heaving during the first winter.

Despite the ominous forecast for a hard killing frost, the midday sun was warm and inviting, facilitating the wealth of projects that lay ahead. Half a dozen orange and black-striped monarch butterflies floated among the flowers sipping nectar to fuel them for their long journey to Mexico, a sure sign that the growing season is coming to a close.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 8

The moon is inactive as it travels in the last sign of the zodiac until 7:07 p.m. That means that new starts are off limits. Instead, tie up loose ends and follow through on unfinished business. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. Influences turn around completely at 7:07 p.m., when the moon enters Aries. A harmonious Venus/Uranus alignment makes this an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of evening.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9

Energy and emotions run high today. Keep a cool head no matter what is happening around you. Channel your energies constructively. The moon continues its travel in Aries, and the full moon continues to build up. Venus moves into Scorpio at 2:56 p.m., remaining there until November 2. A lunar alignment to Saturn at 8:25 p.m. may bring a lull period. Don't let doubt, fear or frustration creep in. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10

The full moon culminates at 3:27 a.m., 16 1/2-degrees of Aries/Libra. The moon continues active travel in Aries, generating high energy today. However, harmonious alignments of Venus-Mars and the sun-Pluto aid productivity, creativity. Zero in on areas of your life you want to change. This is a time to formulate a new plan and start working toward your goals. Kick back and go for the good times this evening.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11

Planetary influences rate high across the board this weekend. The green light is on for new beginnings in your business or personal life. At 4:31 a.m. the Aries moon becomes inactive until 6:05 a.m., when an earthy Taurus moon takes over. Lunar alignments to Mars and Venus this morning generate an outgoing, cheerful mood. Spend quality time with loved ones this evening.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 12

Yesterday's planetary patterns affect today as well. The Taurus moon interacts with Saturn this morning, setting a relaxed pace. In addition, Mercury forms a harmonious 120-degree contact to Neptune, highlighting all creative endeavors. Take time out to relax and unwind. Go on a nature walk; enjoy favorite friends and pastimes. The evening is prime for social and romantic activities.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 13

For the most favorable influences, get an early start to this day. The Taurus moon continues to generate an easygoing, relaxed mood this morning. If you are working, projects will come together easily. As the day goes on, however, influences begin to turn around. A 90-degree alignment to Uranus at 5:02 p.m. may bring unexpected setbacks and disrupt the flow of the day. At this time the Taurus moon becomes inactive until 6:45 p.m., when it enters Gemini. A lunar alignment to Mars at 10:44 p.m. warns against fast driving, risk-taking.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14

Wake up in a good mood. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Saturn warns you to stay upbeat no matter what is happening around you. The good news is that influences improve considerably this afternoon and evening. The moon continues to travel in versatile Gemini, interacting with Jupiter, Neptune and Mercury. Handle a variety of jobs and errands for a productive afternoon. Be sure to take extra time out for fun and games.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 15

A lunar opposition to Pluto may spark emotional thunderstorms this morning. Keep a low profile. Storm clouds move out by 9:00 a.m., however; fair and sunny astrological weather returns for the remainder of the day. People will be sociable, talkative but easily distracted from practical matters. Influences are best for handling projects that require communication with others, like making phone calls or sending e-mails. Sales and promotion campaigns also get the green light.

THURSDAY, OC. 16

This is a great day to get things done. Take on a busy work schedule, particularly jobs that require mental focus and concentration. At 5:54 a.m. the Gemini moon becomes inactive until 7:41 a.m., when it enters the sign Cancer. In addition, Mercury prepares to form a flowing 60-degree contact to Pluto. Take time out for yourself this evening; look within and you will find what you need to get back on track.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17

A challenging lunar alignment to Saturn can make for a rough start to this day. People may be moody, hypersensitive. Avoid morning hassles or the blues. Plan to finish old business rather than starting anything new. Venus interacts with Neptune and Jupiter, making for a pleasant evening. Share a special meal with family and close friends.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

WHAT'S ALL THE NOISE ABOUT?

As it turns out, your child's hearing is not the only thing that might suffer from being exposed to too much noise. A recent study indicates that the noise coming from roads, railways, and other neighborhood clatter can harm children's mental health. This finding comes from an examination of the impact of environmental noise on more than 1,400 children in central Austria in two parallel studies. One study looked at children exposed to a wide range of noise levels, while the other looked at those exposed to either low or high levels of noise. It was found that environmental noise significantly affected how all the children behaved in class, their academic performance, social behavior, and how easily they were distracted.

At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we believe that a hearing loss is a serious problem that deserves professional attention. For children and adults, a hearing loss can greatly affect performance in school, have a profound effect on employment, and too often can act as a barrier to social interaction. That's why Helen Keller said her hearing loss was a greater problem than her blindness. Is a hearing impairment diminshing the enjoyment in your life? Perhaps it's time for a free professional evaluation at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. PH: 781-337-1114. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. According to the study mentioned above, the higher the levels of environmental noise, the greater the impact on the children's mental health.

Printing building permits

Could become new town bylaw

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Building a house or adding an addition may soon be newsworthy of publication in the local paper. If voters at the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting say OK, any home improvements, excluding interior and re-roofing projects would have to be printed for townspeople to see.

The proposed Cohasset bylaw is written almost exactly the same as Hingham's.

If the article passes, the Building Commissioner's Office would be required to send the name or names of the applicant or applicants, the address of the property, the date the permit was issued, and a brief description of the proposed construction or operations, to a local newspaper of general circulation in Cohasset.

Cohasset Building Inspector Bob Egan said he thought publishing building permits is a good idea. But because building permits are public record and could be published without the bylaw, the article doesn't seem necessary, he said.

MBTA wants to stick with two-quad gates and median barriers

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority has dug its heels into the ground over the type of grade-crossing treatments along the Greenbush corridor.

In an extensive letter to the Army Corps of Engineers, which has jurisdiction over wetlands and historic impacts of the project, MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan stated in no uncertain terms that the safety of stand-alone, four-quad gates has not been proven and comparisons to other areas that use the technology aren't valid.

"Under no circumstances will the MBTA place the safety of the public in jeopardy."
—Andrew Brennan, MBTA

Greenbush towns have been unanimous in seeking four-quad gates — which use four arms to stop traffic instead of two — rather than the standard grade crossing treatments with median barriers. The towns feel four-quad gates are safer and eliminate the need for median barriers that could negatively impact neighborhoods.

The letter is likely to set off a new round of controversy over Greenbush.

"The MBTA is here to serve the citizens of Massachusetts," said Hingham Selectman Melissa Tully. "Their abstinence and unwillingness to look at this is not fulfilling that mission."

Brennan said four-quad gates taken alone, without median barriers, represents a technology that has not been sufficiently developed. Therefore, a two-quadrant gate system with medians is satisfactory from an operational and safety standpoint, and would not result in even more impacts to historic and aquatic resources.

He explained the inability to sound a whistle on a regular basis — because Greenbush is a "quiet zone" to reduce noise pollution — adds to the MBTA's concerns at grade crossings.

"While safety is paramount throughout the entire MBTA commuter rail system, it is even more important along the Greenbush corridor that all feasible measures are taken to create safe crossings," Brennan stated.

But Tully said tying four-quad gates with medians is "a red herring" and flies in the face of up-to-date railroad technology.

Pointing to a passenger rail engineering study from Delaware, Tully explained development of four-quad gate systems has been underway for years and the Federal Railroad Administration accepts them as fully proven. In fact, when cross traffic, such as driveways occur within 60 feet of the crossing gate – the FRA proposes four-quad gates be used.

"In fact a North Carolina study shows four-quad gates are much safer than two-quad gates and

Town sees what's cooking

Selectmen hold public forum on Cook Estate plans

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With Cedarmere and the town's proposed Cook Estate project, proposals for affordable housing for seniors are taking center stage.

Both Cedarmere, a 105-unit condo complex off Beechwood Street, and the Cook Estate project seek a special permit from the Planning Board under the town's new Senior Overlay District bylaw, which permits higher-density housing than would otherwise be allowed, and also requires the development include a percentage of affordable housing.

The Cook Estate project – being proposed by selectmen – would include 87-units of mixed, income housing off Sohier Street across from Fair Oaks Lane. Cedarmere, a private development, includes high-end condos and a separate apartment building with affordable units.

The Cook Estate units would consist of apartments and cluster houses, with a portion of the rental units being affordable for low-, moderate- and medium-income seniors. The town will impose design controls and buffer requirements to protect adjacent properties. Estimates are the tax revenue generated by the project, which would not add children to the schools, is about $300,000-$400,000 a year.

Selectmen conducted a public forum on the Cook Estate project Tuesday to answer questions and hear citizens' concerns.

ZBA zeros in on Avalon affordability

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

How affordable is affordable?

That's the question the Zoning Board of Appeals grappled with Saturday during a special deliberation session on the Avalon Bay project at Town Hall.

Chairman Woody Chittick explained the issue of whether Avalon sets aside 20 or 25 percent of its 200 apartments for affordable housing could hinge on what the ZBA feels the town's goals are for its citizens who work as firefighters or teachers, for example.

The guidelines from the state Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) say for 40-B projects, if 25 percent of the units set aside, they must be affordable for those making no more than 80 percent of the Boston area median income, or $50,100 for a family of two. With 20 percent of the units as affordable, the income threshold drops to a maximum of 50 percent of median or $32,300 for a two-person family.

Although with Avalon that means either 40 or 50 units will be affordable housing, because it is a rental project — all 200 units will "count" in the town's affordable housing inventory. In fact, if the ZBA gives Avalon a comprehensive permit that allows the complex to go ahead, the town would reach the 10 percent threshold set by the state and get out from under the threat of more 40-B projects, Chittick explained.

For that reason, the ZBA is

Selectmen sign purchase and sale

The Board of Selectmen have signed the purchase and sale agreement for the Cook Estate, so the process of due diligence can officially begin. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he has received bids from three companies and is ready to make a decision as to which he would like to go with. He hopes this part of the process will be completed by the end of October.

In a related matter, Selectman Tom Callahan has recused himself from some discussion surrounding the town's purchase of the Cook Estate property. Because his law firm recently merged, he has inherited a client who may put in a bid for the project. Therefore, Callahan will not be a part of any discussion regarding the request for proposals, price negotiations, and possibly matters pertaining to contracts.

Town receives recycling award

Selectmen and Recycling Committee member Merle Brown traveled to Worcester last week to accept a plaque on the town's behalf from the Massachusetts Recycling Committee for outstanding efforts in recycling.

However, Town Manager Mark Haddad said by making it a requirement, it will not only provide a valuable service to the town, but will notify abutters of the approved construction in their area, which will give them a chance to know about a project at its outset, rather than prompt questions after the project is already off the ground.

"Right now, it's not required," said Haddad, adding that doesn't mean the current building inspector wouldn't provide them to the newspaper if asked. However, building inspectors can change, and he feels this is an important enough issue, that there should be something in writing to ensure publication is required in the future.

Haddad said Hingham has its building permits printed in the Hingham Journal every week, as a result of a bylaw that town has adopted, and it has worked well. The proposed Cohasset bylaw is written almost exactly the same as Hingham's.

"We don't like to reinvent the wheel," said Haddad, who said when something works in local government, it makes sense to keep it relatively the same for other towns.

Hingham publishes all building permits including those for interior alterations and re-roofing.

"We include every permit we've issued," said Virginia Thursby of the Hingham Building Department, because it's easier than sifting through all the permits, to pick out those that apply.

Building permits provide more than just permission to construct in an area. In fiscal year 2002, Cohasset took in $228,704 in revenue for various licenses and permits.

The building permit bylaw amendment is article 13 on the Warrant for the fall special Town Meeting. The article will be one of 18 to be addressed at the meeting, to be held Monday, Nov. 17 at 7 p.m. in the Cohasset High School Sullivan Gymnasium.

Grade realignment plan to take shape in schools

Task force prepares draft report on shift

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While the first day of school is still fresh in everyone's minds, the School Committee is busy preparing for next fall, when students and staff could see some big changes in light of the reorganization plan slated to begin.

As a result of the renovation and addition projects at the schools, grade levels and program structures would shift to better accommodate students in the new facilities.

Members of a Task Force have been working for the past year on a report outlining potential changes to the schools. Groups of parents, teachers, support staff and administrators participated in the process.

"Reread it and have it at the tip of your tongues," said Supt. Edward Malvey of the draft. "This will be a beacon for the next few months."

With the reorganization would come a shift of grades in the schools. Next fall, Osgood is planned to house students in kindergarten through grade two, with third graders to move over to Deer Hill. Fourth and fifth grade students would remain at Deer Hill, but sixth graders would move up to the middle-high school. Students in grades nine through 12 would still be considered high school students.

With the move, the middle and high schools would become completely separate entities, sharing only the cafeteria, gymnasium, library and media center, and having entirely separate wings. The middle school and high school would operate under separate philosophies, and lower grades would try to operate in as much the same way as they currently are.

Of some concern is the issue of busing with the possible addition of sixth graders to the middle-high school routes. It may become necessary to add another bus to the fleet, but the School Committee will discuss that issue as the time draws closer. The cost for an additional bus would be roughly $60,000.

"Reread it and have it at the tip of your tongues. This will be a beacon for the next few months."
— Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey

Additions to the staff for the middle school could include a new Dean of Students, or similar type administrator, one additional secretary, a nurse, a guidance counselor, and one team leader, which is estimated to cost roughly $166,500.

There will also need to be some discussion on whether to continue with interscholastic sports for students in grades seven and eight, and exclude grade six, or to have all middle high school grades participate in intramural sports.

"These issues are very important to parents," said Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts.

Malvey agreed sports are very important to the growth of students as they help build self-esteem, and assures they will be kept in the schools, although what form they will take is the main concern.

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn recommended looking into how other towns operate in terms of sports at the intermediate level, to which member Mark DeGiacomo said he thought most other towns in the surrounding area do not have interscholastic sports before the high school level.

"We are one of the few schools who do it," he said, but the committee will discuss the matter further at a later date.

While the plans are still in draft form, Malvey hopes they will be finalized by January. The School Committee will vote on various aspects of the plan over the course of the next few months, but also intend to hold a public meeting specifically for the purpose of gaining adequate community input.

"It will also give the kindergarten parents a chance to come forward," said member Pat Martin, who added they may not have been a part of initial discussions if they didn't have a child in the school system at the time.

Flynn said he would like the committee to have 99 percent of its plan together before the public meeting so they would have some fairly concrete ideas to present to the community. No date for the meeting has been set at this time.

Public safety purchases to be put before the voters

Ladder truck, radios, new alerting system on the agenda

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In any emergency, response time is essential. That is why the Cohasset fire and police departments hope voters will approve funds for various pieces of equipment at the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting, which will help those on duty respond even more efficiently in a crisis situation.

The fire department needs a new ladder truck, as well as a new alerting system, which would benefit both departments by adding to the technology currently being used by dispatchers. Additional funding for completing construction will need to be approved as well.

Both the fire and police departments seek new departmental radios, and hope voters realize the importance they carry for those depending on them for communication during an emergency.

The fire department is currently using a 1978 ladder truck, which Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said is "severely restricted," and was due to be replaced two years ago.

Members of the department made a video tape for Selectmen, to show the condition of the old truck and explain just how vital a new truck is to the department's being well prepared to respond to emergencies.

Selectmen were surprised to see the ladder needed to be helped into position by three members of the department. Lincoln said the truck is restricted to a 45-degree angle when raising its ladder, and on the video, getting the ladder in place was a somewhat lengthy process considering every minute counts during an emergency.

There are also holes from rust in the truck and many other problems which naturally occur with older vehicles.

After seeing the video, Selectmen joked the truck should have antique plates and be driven only on the weekends.

If the article passes, the town would allocate $600,000 as a capital request for the purchase of a new truck, which could take between seven and eight months to be delivered, Lincoln said.

Alerting system

While the department waits for the new truck, it is possible a new alerting system could already be up and running. Construction is coming to a close on the fire department's side of the building, which is shared by both departments on Elm Street, and a Zetron alerting system could easily be installed while finishing touches are put on the space.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the original intention for the construction project was to put back the alerting system that had previously been in place, but once that system was removed, it was determined its condition was not satisfactory, and an upgrade would make the most sense to ensure the town's safety.

Because the two departments share a dispatcher, a new system would "Make dispatching more efficient," said Lincoln. New speakers would be installed throughout both buildings which would serve almost as an intercom, through which the dispatcher could alert all company members, in any area of the building, including the outside parking lot, of an emergency. There would be buttons located in certain areas throughout the building which, when pressed, confirm the message was received and responders can be on their way.

The new system would emit tones different from those the departments are used to, which would take some adjusting to. Tones, rather than bells, would sound in the case of an emergency, with different tone sequences given off for different kinds of emergencies. Lincoln said the new sound "notifies, but won't make people jittery," which loud bells often can, he said.

Current computer systems will not be replaced, but the addition of the Zetron system would increase the dispatcher's current capabilities. One feature to be added is an electronic board which will allow the dispatcher to monitor each vehicle on both departments through the use of colored lights. Each vehicle will be marked by a light and one quick glance would be all that is needed to indicate who is available to take a call.

Radios

In addition to the new alerting system, Police Chief Robert Jackson said his department will be receiving new technology in the form of 800 megahertz radios, which have already been purchased with grant money, and will include one base unit and two mobile units. The new radios will allow the department to communicate with the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency and the state police.

Jackson hopes in addition to other requests, voters will pass a capital request which will buy new departmental radios for both the police and fire departments. The fire department has asked for roughly $60,000 to purchase a brand new set of radios, which will replace the current set to enable all radios to work together, not only within it's own department, but with other mutual responders. Lincoln said he will be looking to purchase both a central base unit to be located at dispatch, and mobile radios for department members.

If the article passes, the town would allocate $600,000 as a capital request for the purchase of a new truck, which could take between seven and eight months to be delivered.

Jackson said last year, he had to replace one of his department's mobile radios after a catastrophic failure occurred, and will be asking for funding this year for six mobile units for cruisers and one compatible base station for a rough total of $33,000. Jackson said the department would use $5,400 collected from seizures to help with the purchase of the radios.

Older radios don't have the power necessary to be able to communicate in some of the new, larger buildings in town. For example, the new Sunrise Assisted Living building poses some concern to the departments because the radio waves of those inside cannot penetrate through the thick concrete walls to the outside, making communication impossible. Lincoln said during a fire, if someone on the department got lost in the halls and wasn't able to radio out for help, it could be a very dangerous situation.

"We need ultra-high frequencies to penetrate," Lincoln said, and with the upgrade, communication will be greatly enhanced.

While Haddad said he hopes the fire department will be fully operational out of its Elm Street headquarters within the next three weeks, residents will have to vote to allocate funds to pay for the changes in construction plans as well as the installation of the new alerting system, which will total roughly $90,000.

At last March's Annual Town Meeting, Haddad said $800,000 was allocated for the total construction project, based on the bids received prior to the meeting. After construction began, it was determined the original increase of two feet to the height of the roof would not be enough to accommodate future and existing apparatus, and would have to be raised an additional eight inches to "accommodate future fire needs," said Haddad.

When the roof was removed, it was determined there was no bond beam support holding up the roof, which would need to be included in the construction cost as well. The total cost of the additional height, bond beam, and electrical work came to $74,000.

With the added construction, the town had to rent out the former Graham Waste building as temporary headquarters for the fire department for an additional two months, at a cost of $7,000.

"We really were careful moving forward," Haddad said, but some costs don't show themselves until after the process has begun.

Chief Jackson said contractors told him they are aiming to be done with the majority of renovations by Nov. 4. While there could still be "punch list" items to be taken care of, he said he is optimistic construction will be done by then.

While he admits it has been somewhat of a challenge working day to day with contractors coming in and out, Jackson said the contractors have been really great to work with.

The majority of Selectmen voted to support allocating funds for the remainder of construction on the fire building including the new alerting system, with Merle Brown abstaining. All voted to support both departments receiving new radios.

Emergency help is on the way

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Chris Grant mans the emergency dispatch center at the police-fire headquarters off Elm Street.

When there is an emergency, police officers and firefighters rush to the scene, ready to respond at a moment's notice. However, behind the scenes are the dispatchers, who serve as the backbone of the entire operation, coordinating help while providing assurance to those with a crisis that there is a person on the other end of the phone doing all they can to make sure help is on its way.

At the Cohasset police department, a large desk lights up with various computer screens, control panels, phones, monitors, and buttons, to aid dispatchers in their job. Currently, there are six full time dispatchers and one "floater" to fill in when needed. Shifts run from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., 4 p.m. to midnight, and midnight to 8 a.m., providing service to residents 24 hours a day.

Whether it be medical assistance, a fire, a burglary, or a bank alarm, dispatchers need to know how to handle each and every call that comes their way, and remain calm while doing so. Dispatch Supervisor Thomas Wigmore said as a dispatcher, it is important to remember that people are calling because they need help. Sometimes people call for small reasons, even to ask which days the dump is open, but it is still imperative that each and every call is handled with importance.

Because both the police and fire departments share a dispatcher, there can be times when multiple calls come in, but specific procedures have to be followed to the letter, even when things get busy. Wigmore said every new dispatcher goes through intensive training to make sure they can handle any emergency situation, and he personally tries to hold a session every two months, alternating between fire and police dispatching needs, to make sure everyone is working to the best of their ability.

"It's not just answering phones anymore," he said.

Dispatchers have an array of technology at their disposal, to help organize the many responsibilities they have. While they are responsible for answering phone calls, they must also know who is calling and from where. They must be able to gather all information necessary to ensure the proper aid is dispatched. They must also be able to give help on the line and remain calm, no matter how dire the situation may seem on the other end.

Once responders are on the scene, dispatchers make sure they have everything they need, including contacting any utilities that may need to shut off service in a particular area while rescue crews work. They also watch out for any alert messages that could mean a responder is in trouble. Portable radios have panic buttons that alert dispatchers of trouble when pressed. The radio lets dispatchers know the name of the officer, which comes up on a screen back at the station. While Wigmore said usually panic buttons are pressed by accident, sometimes there will be an officer down who needs assistance and the dispatcher must be able to get that person immediate help.

"If you've got three guys working, three guys need to come home," he said.

Dispatchers also need to know who to call if the ambulance is in service somewhere else, and who to call for backup if extra help is needed.

"It's a lot for a dispatcher to take care of," Wigmore said.

In addition, dispatchers monitor other towns to stay on top of who can cover for Cohasset if need be, or who Cohasset might be called in to assist. There is also a camera which feeds to a monitor at the dispatch desk, so dispatchers can keep an eye on anyone in the cells. Wigmore said it is an uncommon occurrence to even have someone in a cell, but it has happened and there have been problems which needed to be addressed in the past.

When a call comes in, a small screen tells dispatchers where it is coming from. When answering the phone, certain tones can notify dispatchers if a person hung up before their call was answered, distinguishing it from others that may have a caller who is unable to respond on the other end. If, for example, a baby got hold of a phone and pushed the buttons by accident and the mother hung up the phone, the dispatcher would be able to tell that call was different from one where an injured person may have dialed the numbers and was not able to respond, which would sound like a dead line on their end. Whenever there is a hang up call, dispatchers call the home back and always send an officer, even if the caller says everything is alright, just to make sure there is no emergency situation.

Most calls are answered at the dispatch center in the police station, however, sometimes multiple calls come in at a time and it is possible for them to "fall through the cracks" if no one is available to answer.

"It gets busy in here," Wigmore said.

However, because the system is designed to be answered, the caller does not get disconnected, they are merely automatically transferred to another town's line to be answered there. The Political signs to be included on warrant

Town counsel examines bylaw constitutionality

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Voters at the fall special Town Meeting will have a political sign bylaw to vote on, which has been written to ensure the town of Cohasset does not violate the right to free speech guaranteed in the First Amendment.

Selectmen Fred Koed said the town of Braintree had to rewrite its political sign bylaw after a very similar bylaw to theirs was found to be unconstitutional. Because political signs were treated differently from other similar signs in that town's bylaw, it was changed so as not to inhibit free speech.

Koed thought in light of those findings, it was important to take a close look at Cohasset's proposed bylaw to make sure it was not guilty of the same offense.

"Free speech is one of the issues," Koed said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Town Counsel was contacted and the proposed bylaw has been reworked. He said hopefully the voters will pass the new bylaw as it stands.

"The bylaw must be in compliance," and Town Counsel made sure of that, he said.

The proposed bylaw will amend the definition of a political sign to become "Any sign on which a person's candidacy for public office is announced or advertised or which expresses the view of the owner or occupant on a matter of public concern."

In addition to the definition change, no signs except a posting or identification sign, smaller than two square feet, or a political sign attached to a building or in a front yard, will be permitted without first obtaining a building permit from the Building Inspector.

Various amendments clarifying how certain signs should be classified by the town are also included in the article.

Koed said the new proposed bylaw will be reviewed by Selectmen before the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting "To make sure it accomplishes what we want it to accomplish."

Avalon site cleanup goes public

The site of the proposed Avalon 200-unit housing development has been designated as a Public Involvement Plan (PIP) site under the state Chapter 21E hazardous waste site cleanup regulations.

"This means that the site owner, Westwood Properties, must prepare a Public Involvement Plan which shall be presented at a public hearing which must be held no later than Nov. 21," Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said in a prepared statement.

"Now, the environmental review of the site and all cleanup activities are a public process," he said. "The town and the public now have a right to review and comment on all stages of the review and cleanup of the toxic chemicals on the Avalon site."

The site was designated as a PIP site on request of the Water Commission and 10 other Cohasset residents who submitted a PIP petition to Westwood Properties on Sept. 8.

"There are potentially serious levels of contamination in the soil and groundwater at the site, which is a state 21E hazardous waste site" McNabb said. "Since this site is in the watershed for Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply, the Water Commission wants to make sure that, whatever happens on this property, that the hazardous waste is properly cleaned up."

"Since this site is in the watershed for Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply, the Water Commission wants to make sure that, whatever happens on this property, that the hazardous waste is properly cleaned up."

— John McNabb, chairman

McNabb said an environmental study of the site released Aug. 22 detected 108 parts per billion (ppb) of trichloroethylene, a toxic chemical, in groundwater on the site. The drinking water standard is five ppb.

"They have also found 142 ppb of tetrachloroethylene, also very far above the standard of 5 ppb, in the groundwater," he said.

"Public oversight of this site is essential because until earlier this year both the site owner and the state were not evaluating the site under drinking water standards," McNabb said. "Because of repeated requests to the state to make sure that this site is cleaned up to drinking water standards, the DEP finally in March ordered that drinking water standards be followed."

"It seems every time this area, which has been an industrial area for over 50 years, is studied that more contaminants are found," he said. "We also want to make sure that before any construction starts on this site that all the contaminants have been removed and that the site is no longer a threat to future residents of the site or to our drinking water."

Emergency help is on the way out of town departments can then either respond themselves to the call or relay the message back to Cohasset, but ultimately the dispatcher needs to be on top of all situations to know who is available to respond. Wigmore said Cohasset sometimes receives calls from Hull or Scituate when those towns are flooded with calls.

"I like the aspect of dispatchers actually working the call," Wigmore said, adding many large cities have call centers, which work much like an answering service, and are there only to process the incoming call on to various dispatchers. Dispatchers then send the call on to the individual departments in terms of priority, but the call has to go through many people just to be answered. In Cohasset, and many surrounding towns, police and fire calls fall under the same umbrella, meaning the person who answers the phone knows where members of both departments are, who to call if responders need additional help, and who to call if all responding units are tied up somewhere else. In addition, dispatchers need to make sure responders are safe and be ready at a moment's notice to call for backup if it is needed.

Even with all the technology available to dispatchers, Wigmore said he is hoping voters at town meeting will approve funds for a new alerting system for the combined station, which could help improve communication between dispatchers and the departments.

The new system would be an addition to the equipment dispatchers already have. A new board would be installed which would have vehicles for the departments represented in lights, so at first glance a dispatcher would be able to tell who was available for a call. A new speaker system would ensure tones could be heard throughout both stations, and buttons would be located in various positions around the station, which responders would hit to confirm they received the message. The new speakers would allow for clear communication from the dispatcher to those responding.

"It's imperative that you have good police and fire communication," he said.

Town boards provide opinions on Cook Estate

Trails, special toilets proposed

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Residents aren't the only ones weighing in on the proposed development on the Cook Estate. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he has received valuable feedback from both the Board of Health and the Open Space Committee, which will help aid the town in completing the draft of the request for proposals.

Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo was present at Tuesday's public hearing for the Cook Estate development, and said while listening to the proposal, one of his two major concerns had already been addressed.

Selectmen had discussed including some kind of walking trail around the property, which would allow those living in the development to have easy walking access to the shopping center, and perhaps the town library. Bobo said he was very pleased to hear that, because the Board of Health has been working hard on getting a Rails with Trails program set up, which would provide walking trails adjacent to the tracks of the Greenbush line, and he hopes the development's trails could somehow connect with those by the train.

Another concern Bobo had was whether an innovative wastewater disposal plan had been conceived for the project. He suggested including composting toilets into the design stage of the development, as a way to eliminate ground water discharge and keep nitrogen out of Lily Pond.

If the development ended up with 95 units of housing, a wastewater disposal design for roughly 14,000 gallons a day would be required, based on the estimate of 150 gallons per day per unit. While one-bedroom units could perhaps be brought down to a little more than 10,000 gallons a day, once the flow exceeds 10,000, a groundwater discharge permit needs to be issued by the state, and a wastewater treatment plant would need to be constructed. Even with a treatment plant, Bobo said some nitrogen would be discharged into Lily Pond, and composting toilets could eliminate many potential problems.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said because composting toilets are "not the norm," it is important to take the marketability of units into consideration.

However, Bobo said composting toilets have come a long way and "they look just like regular toilets."

"They used to be a glorified privy," he said, but now. "They sanitize themselves every time you flush the things."

Bobo said he has spoken with a composting toilet representative, who has agreed to come with Bobo to town meeting to show residents a sample composting toilet.

The Open Space Committee offered praise for Selectmen and their efforts to acquire the Cook property "in order to control development," as well as suggestions on how to make the most of the development.

The committee feels the preliminary design plans for the property are not appropriate because it will not provide much in the way of an alternative from what is already offered at 100 Pond Street, Wheelwright Estates, and Cedarledge Village.

The Open Space Committee would like to see a development created in the same fashion a New England village might. They would like to see buildings more clustered, to provide a sense of a close-knit community rather than a strip subdivision, and would also conserve land.

Collectively, the Open Space Committee envisions front porches instead of garage doors facing the street, with neighborhoods facing a center point and placement of buildings that could section off outdoor rooms, providing a feeling of interconnectedness for those who live there.

The Open Space Committee has suggested Selectmen take a look at Battle Road Farm in Lincoln, and Human Services Campus in Falmouth, to get ideas on how a village-type setting could be accomplished in Cohasset. Selectmen said they will take all suggestions under advisement.

If voters approve the project at the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting and an appropriate developer can be found, a simultaneous closing between the town, developer and realtor would take place in summer 2004. The simultaneous closing would eliminate the need for the town to provide the funds to purchase the 22-acre Cook Estate property, which is valued at $4.5 million.

Ensuring the project is truly affordable surfaced as a key issue at Tuesday's forum.

Peter Pratt, who was at the meeting citizen and not in his Planning Board role, said he would like to see the town demand a higher level of affordability.

"Can the widow Jones sell her cape that she's had for 30 years and live here?" he said.

Pratt said he would like to see Selectmen "set your top line priorities," and of utmost concern should be affordable housing. He thinks the town should provide alternatives for seniors so they don't have to leave when they decide to downsize. The plans need to take a look at whether selling a home to move into one of the smaller units on the Cook Estate makes financial sense. " This isn't everyone's idea of affordable housing," Pratt said.

But Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said many seniors could make an average of $700,000 from the sale of their homes and would therefore, not qualify for affordable housing. She suggested varying the price of some "for sale" units.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said higher affordability, including possibly two or three levels of prices for those units for sale could be somehow written into the language of the RFP, to help guide developers.

Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road, said if she had her way, there would be no development in her backyard, but said if something needs to go forward, the town should be very specific in steering developers toward coming up with a design that will fit the needs of the town, including a wide variety of affordable housing.

"There aren't a lot of options for lower income families to purchase," she said, adding that with rents so high, many seniors "might as well stay in their homes."

Selectmen said restrictions will be written into the RFP which developers would need to abide by. Developers can be selected based on a number of weighted criteria, which includes the quality of the design, the ability to complete the project based on a set timetable, the quality of affordable housing, and the financial gain to the town. If the developer's bid price would not cover all the costs associated with the town's purchase of the property, that developer would not be considered.

Other concerns for abutters included the boundaries surrounding the project. One parcel of land across the street near the Fairoaks neighborhood will be set aside as conservation land, which will provide a permanent buffer from the development. Other areas surrounding the property, have also been set aside as buffer zones which are mostly wetlands areas.

While the plans shown at the hearing are preliminary, having feedback provided valuable information as to what would be acceptable for abutters, selectmen said.

David Crawford, 64 Old Pasture Road, suggested moving one of the two three-story buildings, which would house affordable apartments, to a location closer to Stop and Shop. Many abutters said because of the wetlands surrounding the Cook property, the woods are not that dense and neighbors would clearly be able to see the new development from their homes. While landscaping could be done to help provide a buffer zone, developers will ultimately come up with their own designs and buildings could me much different from what was shown on Tuesday night.

Haddad said, perc tests will determine where buildings can be located and the plans could change and the land would be staked so abutters have a clear idea of where buildings can be placed.

Plans are to combine the 22.4-acre Cook estate the adjacent 9.8-acre parcel the town owns near Stop & Shop and Red Fox Lane.

The purchase of the Cook property, which is subject to Town Meeting authorization, would be contingent on the town being able to find an acceptable buyer for the combined property, Haddad explained.

Zoning Board of Appeals zeros in on Avalon affordability leaning away from asking Avalon to reduce the size of the project to 150 or 175 units.

Chapter 40B is the state affordable housing law that allows developers to skirt local zoning bylaws, such as housing density, in exchange for providing 20 or 25 percent of the project as affordable housing. Towns with less than 10 percent of their housing stock deemed affordable by state standards — meaning the units are deed restricted and receive a state subsidy — are vulnerable to 40B projects. Cohasset currently has 76 units of affordable housing out of about 2,700 households.

What the ZBA does not want to do is eliminate the potential for number of local citizens who need affordable housing but might make more than $32,000 but less than $50,000 to qualify for housing. About 70 percent of Avalon's affordable units could be given "local preference" to Cohasset residents or people who work in town.

Chittick said he discussed the issue with Town Manager Mark Haddad who said more town employees would qualify for housing at 80 percent of median.

In order to keep the number of children down in the project, the ZBA is also considering asking Avalon to eliminate all the three-bedroom units in the project. Chittick said it was a condition the selectmen feel strongly about because they are concerned about adding an influx of new children to the schools.

The ZBA may also ask AvalonBay to include a daycare center in its plans to build an apartment complex off Route 3A. Also on the table are sidewalks along Route 3A and up Sohier Street, mosquito control in the storm-water retention ponds and catch basins, organic landscaping, location of the school bus stop, pedestrian crossings across 3A, and walking and biking trails connecting to Thayer and Whitney Woods, to name a few.

The ZBA also discussed reducing the grade of the driveway into the complex from 8 to 6 percent as a safety measure and the potential for a traffic light at Sohier Street.

The ZBA closed the yearlong Avalon hearing last month and has until Oct. 26 to reach a decision without an extension that Avalon would have to agree to.

MBTA wants to stick with two-quad gates and median barriers

median barriers," she said.

Four-quad gates fully block a motorist from entering a crossing and deter them from driving around a lowered gate to beat the train.

Tully said new technology equips four-quad gates with detector systems and special circuits so the exit gate won't lower if a vehicle is between the gates.

But according to the MBTA, only 80 out of 247,000 grade crossings in the United States use four-quad gates and only eight use the combination of four-quad gates, no median barriers and no whistles. Some of those are in rural areas.

"This sample is not statistically significant enough for the MBTA to determine that the use of the experimental technology has been adequately tested and that the MBTA can be certain that the safety of the railroad, our passengers, our crews or the people living, working and traveling along the corridor who may be affected by a railroad accident, will not be compromised.

"Under no circumstances will the MBTA place the safety of the public in jeopardy," Brennan stated.

He explained that safety issues associated with four-quad gates also create operational issues. To ensure trains stop before hitting a car caught on the tracks by the four-gate system, the gates would need to be lowered 90 seconds longer than with standard gates. This would triple the length of time gates are down, and therefore, increase traffic congestion and the risk drivers would try to avoid the gate system.

"The driver's expectation the gates will be down for only a short period of time is one of the primary reasons the MBTA experiences fewer cars driving around the gates than in a typical freight railroad," Brennan said.

The MBTA conducted a study for more than a year at Wales Street in Abington using a four-quad gate system with 15-foot medians because the roadway geometry at the site limited the length of the medians. But because longer medians would be required and Abington is not whistle-free complicate the results when applied to Greenbush, Brennan said.

Tully, the Hingham selectman, described the five-year-old MBTA study as outdated and flawed. She stressed that four-quad gates aren't only for cars, but can stop a pedestrian or cyclist from crossing the tracks in front of an oncoming train.

"The MBTA's stance on this is unconscionable," she said. "They are risking lives of the people in these towns."

The MBTA also does not think the issue of four-quad gates warrants a corridor study analyzing each grade crossing as suggested at the Army Corps hearing on the issue in September.

"First, it is not the MBTA's position that four-quadrant gates are inappropriate on just the grade crossings along the Greenbush corridor," Brennan said. "It is the MBTA's position that the use of four-quadrant gates, particularly without median barriers, is inappropriate on the entire MBTA commute rail system at this time."

He explained the corridor study would raise the expectation the MBTA views some crossings as appropriate for this treatment, when it believes that they are not yet appropriate anywhere in the MBTA system.

But Tully said the MBTA's motivation is cost and that new railroad systems across the country are studying grade-crossing treatments on a crossing-by-crossing basis.

"The MBTA is only looking at a low-technology, low-cost system," she said. Tully pointed out each Greenbush grade crossing is different and therefore, each needs to be looked at individually to see what works best. An example is the Hersey-South-North-Thaxter streets crossing in Hingham that with two-quad gates and a series of medians creates a complicated situation that would be totally unsafe to motorists and emergency vehicles alike, she said.

"All we want is to protect our citizens and for the MBTA to come to the table with an open and willing mind to work with us," Tully said.

Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad agreed a corridor study is needed because of the unusual configurations at certain crossings, such as Pleasant Street near the Strawberry Parfait. "They should be looked at on a case-by-case basis," he said.

Brennan said the MBTA does not believe the Section 106 Programmatic Agreement [under the National Historic Preservation Act] allows the Army Corps to supercede the MBTA's decisions of this critical safety element of the project.

"The Army Corps would need to require the MBTA to use these treatments with no medians as a permit condition, since the MBTA will not acquiesce to the use of these crossing treatments," Brennan stated.

Haddad said the towns did an outstanding job of stressing the importance of four-quad gates before the Army Corps.

"Now it's up to the Army Corps to make a decision so we're not here 26 years from now having the same debate," he said.

The Greenbush line is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project and is expected to return commuter trail from Weymouth to Scituate in 2005. The Plymouth and Middleboro lines resumed service in 1997.

Paramedics become town-based

SSH to terminate hospital program

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"We stepped up to the plate when there was no paramedic service. Clearly the towns want their own community-based service and we're happy to step aside."
— Scott Picard, South Shore Hospital

Come January, the South Shore Hospital-based paramedic program will be history.

That means the advanced life support SUV – which has been a common sight in area towns — will no longer be rolling to accident sites or to meet local ambulances.

But this is actually a good news story for South Shore towns, says hospital spokesman Scott Picard.

"We stepped up to the plate when there was no paramedic service," he said. "Clearly the towns want their own community-based service and we're happy to step aside."

Picard said the service started in 1992 in response to a community health need and now ALS (Advanced Life Support) has undergone a successful transition to the communities. He said the hospital would continue to be a partner with the towns in terms of medical direction, continuing education and quality assurance.

The ALS unit out of the hospital provided paramedic care to 16 communities at its peak in the mid-90s and received more than 6,000 requests for service, treating more than 3,600 patients per year.

Back in 1990, an ALS study committee met with fire chiefs and town officials serviced by the hospital to develop a plan to provide better emergency medical coverage to the region. At that time, the consensus was the most cost effective and efficient solution was to provide paramedics to the towns through a regional service operating out of the hospital.

But that was before towns had full-time paramedics.

"The service started about 10 years ago when none of the towns had their own paramedics," Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln recalled. "The South Shore Hospital paramedics were the only paramedic service we had."

He said over the years, the towns started employing their own paramedics. Cohasset, which now has nine paramedics, was using the hospital-based service less and less, Lincoln says.

Hingham Fire Chief William Johnson puts it more succinctly.

"We basically put them out of business," he says. Back in 1998 no fire departments in the metropolitan-Boston area had their own paramedic service. At that time, Johnson, along with then Scituate Chief James Breen, planned to transition to a paramedic service. The two towns became the first in the Boston-area to offer fire department-based paramedics.

Hingham now has 22 paramedics out an authorized strength of 52 firefighters, and provides paramedic service 24-7. Within a month, Hingham plans to have a second-response team available anytime the ambulance is tied up. That team would respond to the call in a fire truck and begin ALS service with transport to the hospital provided by mutual aid if the Hingham ambulance is unavailable.

Johnson says having community based paramedic service brings the modern emergency room to the doorstep, in fact in some parts of the country, ambulances are now called MIC (Mobile Intensive Care) units. He adds that all Hingham paramedics are cross-trained as firefighters.

Lincoln said statistics show Cohasset was using the hospital-based service 12 percent of the time.

"It was an efficient and good service," he said. "But sometimes it had to travel a long distance adding to response time or was unavailable."

Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad along with Cohasset Selectman Ronnie McMorris and Chief Lincoln set transitioning to a paramedic service as a priority about six years ago.

"It enables us to provide quicker care for our residents," Haddad said.

Cohasset ambulance receipts "pre-paramedic" ran at about $100,000-$125,000 and now they are upwards of $300,000 a year. "Paramedic service is more than paying for itself," Haddad said.

In Hingham, prior to town paramedics, ambulance receipts were about $150,000 a year and now they are $400,000, said Johnson, adding Hingham has been using the hospital-based paramedic service "very rarely."

Lincoln, the Cohasset chief, sees community based paramedic service as a life-saving service because of shortened response times. "Time is of the essence and people have a better chance of survival," he said.

Cohasset is operating under a waiver from Emergency Medical Service Region 4, allowing it to operate with one paramedic and one EMT per shift. Once the hospital-based service ends, Cohasset will operate with two paramedics on each shift — temporarily covering the added cost through overtime. Cohasset will add a 10th paramedic soon and hopes to have 12 full-time paramedics on board within a year, Lincoln said. In addition to the nine firefighter/paramedics, the Cohasset Fire Department employs 10 firefighter/EMTs and five firefighters for a manpower total of 24.

The Dec. 31 date to stop the hospital's ALS service is conditional on the towns of Hanover and Norwell obtaining paramedic waivers and initiating their own ALS service.

South Shore Hospital will continue to provide medical control to the community based ambulance services and all community based paramedics will be required to participate in the hospital's quality assurance activities. The hospital will also continue to provide monthly education programs and skills maintenance review for all community-based paramedics.

OPINION

It's about saving lives

Over the past decade South Shore Hospital's paramedic SUV has become a familiar sight to many of us. "P-1" and its sister SUV "P-2" transported hospital-based paramedics to the scene of accidents or met local ambulances en route to the hospital so the ill or injured could receive critically needed Advanced Life Support.

But at the end of this year, South Shore Hospital will no longer provide paramedic service to area towns because it's no longer needed.

That's because community fire departments have made providing their own paramedic service to their citizens a priority — which means those who need Advanced Life Support are getting the life-saving service faster.

It's an amazing transition considering as recently as 1998, no fire departments in the Boston metropolitan area had paramedic service.

Those thinking about the effect of more high-tech ambulance service on their property taxes can take solace in the fact that paramedics are a bargain.

Keep in mind, the fire department has manpower on 24-7, so why not have those with the most training in life-saving techniques on board? Fire departments aren't necessarily growing in size but are replacing firefighters with paramedics through attrition or providing the training needed for firefighters to upgrade their medical skills. Our paramedics are also cross-trained as firefighters.

Towns with paramedic service have seen their ambulance receipts soar.

But the critical issue here is being able to provide life-saving medical care sooner when it can really make a difference — whether that be for an accident or heart attack victim.

Area towns that have been served by P-1 and P-2, however, owe a debt of gratitude to South Shore Hospital for showing them the way.

As hospital spokesman Scott Picard says, "We stepped up to the plate when there was no paramedic service. Clearly the towns want their own community based service and we're happy to step aside."

We also need to thank town officials and fire chiefs for have the foresight to see a good thing and go with it.

Today, countless families are celebrating every single day with a loved one, who could have been lost, if it hadn't been for the Advanced Life Support administered by paramedics.

Police share pizza with seniors at CHS

TO THE EDITOR:

Two members of the Cohasset Police Department came to Cohasset High School on a recent Tuesday and participated in a pizza lunch with the seniors.

We'd like to thank Chief Jackson and Detective Hunt for being the first to come to this activity.

The purpose of this casual lunch is to give seniors and police officers a chance to socialize in a positive way. Hopefully, this will lead to an improved relationship.

On behalf of the class of 2004, thanks again to the Cohasset Police Department for your cooperation!

Brick Sidewalks - the Village

To: Mark Haddad, Town Manager

As you know I drive the Town medical/handicapped van. I deal with people in wheelchairs, walkers, canes, and those who find walking difficult and others. These people find that brick sidewalks are just plain dangerous. They are slippery in wet weather, they are slippery in snowy weather and no matter how even they are when they're first installed it doesn't take long for them to become uneven and an uneven surface, wet or dry, is bad for walking by many categories of people, old or young.

I've enclosed a copy of an article that appeared in the Sept. 10 Boston Globe, "Disabled say sidewalks made of bricks are a hazard." I ask that you read this and include some of the thoughts that are expressed here in your deliberations as to what surface we should have throughout the Village. I'm not only concerned with older pedestrians - I've seen, you've seen, mothers with strollers navigating roadways and sidewalks throughout Cohasset and these people find that an even surface is more easily handled.

Please look around and as you walk around Cohasset Village or any other small town village note how the pedestrians handle the sidewalks and roadways. Use your common sense.

Mass. Eagle Forum sponsors brunch

Massachusetts Chapter of the Eagle Forum President Nancy O'Toole of Cohasset coordinated the annual brunch hosting National Eagle Forum President Phyllis Schlafly. As in past years, the event took place in the Grand Ballroom at Lantana's in Randolph. Schlafly was introduced by talk show host and former columnist for the Boston Herald Don Feder.

Schlafly spoke to hundreds of attendees. Her subject was "What the Global Economy Costs Americans"

Here is an excerpt from her remarks:

"The big argument for the tax cut just, signed by President Bush is that it will create much-needed jobs. But one big question remains: will those jobs be created for Americans, or will corporations simply hire more job-seekers from India and China? It's time for Congress to call a halt to the scandal of the way big corporations hire foreigners at the same time they are laying off their American employees. The hiring of hundreds of thousands of foreigners is why this year's college graduates face the worst job market in recent memory.

Rita Burke of Cohasset with Phyllis Schlafly at the Eagle Forum Brunch.

"When U.S. corporations built hundreds of plants in Third World countries, we were told not to worry about losing blue-collar manufacturing jobs because we were keeping the service jobs. Now the high-paying white collar service jobs are going overseas, too, particularly jobs for engineers and computer specialists."

Cohasset Cultural Grants are announced

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, state Rep. Garrett Bradley and Diane Kennedy, chairwoman of the Cohasset Cultural Council, have announced the awarding of two cultural grants totaling $6,450. The grants, awarded by the Massachusetts Cultural Council, will benefit cultural programs in Cohasset.

The Grant recipients are the South Shore Art Center, which will receive $4,450 and the Cohasset Cultural Council, which will receive $2,000.

The state legislature provides an annual appropriation to the Massachusetts Cultural Council, which then allocates funds to each local council. Decisions as to which activities are supported are made at the community level by a board of municipally appointed volunteers.

The grant awarded to the South Shore Art Center, a non-profit organization, will be used to encourage participation in and education of the arts for the communities of the South Shore.

The Cultural Council Grants support an wide range of local activities, including: concerts, exhibitions, radio and video productions, field trips for schoolchildren, after-school youth programs, writing workshops, historical preservation efforts, lectures,, nature and science education programs.

Delahunt weighs in on Iraq at South Shore Peace Forum

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Congressman William Delahunt stopped by Hingham this weekend on his way back from visiting families of soldiers on Cape Cod.

The Congressman said it's apparent from his visit there that "we have a lot of hurting soldiers. Morale is suffering despite what the Administration puts forth."

He also spoke about a shortage of American troops. "The fact that so many reservists and guardsmen have had their deployment extended has had an effect on morale," he said.

A group of South Shore Peace Forum members and others who heard about the Congressman's expected visit by word of mouth gathered in the Old Ship Church Parish Hall on Columbus Day. The original purpose was to talk about a public forum on foreign policy issues the group would like to host later this year featuring Delahunt as guest speaker. But when about 40 people turned out, Delahunt welcomed the opportunity to answer questions and address concerns from the audience. "Let's make this a conversation," he said.

US Rep. Bill Delahunt talks to members of the South Shore Peace Forum Monday in Hingham.

The Peace Forum requested the meeting with Delahunt. "We feel the way the Administration is heading produces more violence and misunderstanding. We would much prefer cooperation between the nations and their people," member Shirley Brown said. "We're very concerned about the number of people being killed – our own troops and people in Afghanistan and Iraq. So we wanted to hear Congressman Delahunt's perspective on what Congress will do with respect to appropriating more money when we obviously need it here for our own homeland programs – schools and social and health programs."

"To be fair, we are building roads and hospitals and providing books in Iraq. I only wish we could do that in America."

— U.S. Rep. Bill Delahunt

The purpose of the proposed future public forum is to "get a more global view of the situation," Brown said. The purpose of the Peace Forum, which has been meeting since the first Gulf War, is to "witness for peace and call for a new foreign policy based on diplomacy and international cooperation." The group, which continues its weekly Tuesday vigil in front of the downtown Hingham post office, seeks peaceful and nonviolent solutions to conflicts both at home and abroad.

Delahunt, who voted against the War Resolution, said he believes Congress will appropriate the requested $87 billion the Administration is seeking for military expenses and to reconstruct Iraq but is uncertain about how further requests would be received. This is only a "down payment," he noted. He does plan, however, to put forth an amendment to decrease the figure by $1.8 billion, representing currently unfunded veterans' programs.

Delahunt further noted that Iraq still owes the United States $4 billion "from our coddle up to Saddam phase" during the 1980s and that Americans are facing increasing deficits and poverty levels. "Mortgage foreclosures are at an historic level," he said.

Delahunt recommended tuning in to C-Span's "Iraq Watch" to hear ongoing exchanges about "what mistakes we've made and continue to be made and where we go from here. We now have a regular following. C-Span junkies, look for your member of Congress."

After talking with parents of servicemen and women, Delahunt said it's clear "the resources are not there. Our soldiers aren't being outfitted properly. Some families have told me they've purchased $900 bulletproof vests to send overseas to their soldiers, despite Administration rhetoric that things are improving."

According to published reports, however, the House version of the $87 billion Iraq spending bill passed last week includes $251 million for body armor and for clearing unexploded munitions. No further funds for body armor were included in President George Bush's original request.

At the same time, Delahunt added, "To be fair, we are building roads and hospitals and providing books in Iraq. I only wish we could do that in America."

Delahunt said that he and others concerned about the ongoing war will "start asking questions publicly again in a few weeks if we don't get answers."

Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts of Cohasset brought up the issue of civil liberties in light of the Patriot Act, which imposes restrictions and limitations on certain civil liberties in an effort to counter terrorism.

"Peace workers care about our civil liberties," she said. "People now seem to be saying it's okay to question our government more, whereas there was a lot more animosity toward us when we first started."

Delahunt has also noticed some change in public opinion. "There has clearly been a shift in attitude about the Patriot Act and Iraq," he said. The Congressman is encouraged by the fact that the Act's current "sunset" provisions require it to expire in 2005. Still, he warned against complacency. "We absolutely have to be concerned and vigilant. . . . We are in a war [to preserve our liberties] . . . . Get energized. Start taking your country back. Do not give up."

Delahunt noted that far more personnel will be required to complete the present task in Iraq and even more could be required by future actions elsewhere. If the Administration "continues its aggressive foreign policy, we could end up with a draft," he said, noting that such a move would likely cause a public outcry.

Booze and the legislature

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The Legislature took another swing at Cotton Mather the other day and, as far as I can make out, the old Puritan divine scared the lawmakers once again, this time by a score of 87 to 64.

The bill, filed by Rep. Dan Bosley of North Adams, would have repealed the final colonial Blue Law by lifting the prohibition on the Sunday sale of adult beverages more than 10 miles from the borders of Vermont and New Hampshire, where such sales are legal.

Packies less than 10 miles from the borders, of course, would be at a competitive disadvantage on the Sabbath so they already are permitted to stay open, a legal technicality I find difficult to comprehend that a store at 9.9 miles could be legal and store at 10.1 miles could not.

There's nothing that turns a legislator into a quivering mass of vacillation like booze...

And packies everywhere in Massachusetts can hawk their wares on every Sunday between Thanksgiving and Christmas, a high holy season for most people, drinkers or not, although the original framers of the Blue Laws didn't pay much attention to Christmas anyway.

"If you're not smart enough to buy it in six days you don't deserve to drink it on the seventh," our own Senator Mike Morrissey is quoted as saying, which puts him in a league with Toots Shor, the New York innkeeper, who once said, "If you ain't drunk by midnight, you ain't trying."

There's nothing that turns a legislator into a quivering mass of vacillation like booze, unless it's sex, which can send them out of the country until the matter blows over. But don't get the idea I'm picking on our legislators.

I can recall a trip to the Midwest once when I caught a United Airlines 707 to Chicago and an Ozark Airlines Sopwith Camel to the Mississippi River town of Burlington, Iowa, where I had a two hour layover for the train to Keokuk.

Fortunately, there was a bar across the street from the station. Unfortunately, Iowa was dry for all but beer and wine and the back bar was loaded down with beer bottles instead of Johnny Walker Red or Jack Daniels Green like a normal bar.

"Where can I get a real drink around here?" I asked the bartender.

"Right here," he said, pulling a bottle of Four Roses out from under the bar.

Even the sheriff winked at the state liquor laws in the Iowa river towns since those who liked a taste now and then had only to drive across a quarter of a mile of bridge to Illinois where booze flowed like Al Capone was still behind it.

Again, I flew into Edmonton from the Northwest Territories one time and hastened to the taproom of the King George Hotel to wash away the taste of muskeg. It was only five o'clock in the afternoon but the taproom was closed and a swamper was sweeping up.

"Don't worry," said a guy who was sitting by the door. "They open again at six."

He explained there was an old English law that forced a public house to close from five to six so that a worker would have an hour to think it over and go home before blowing his whole paycheck on a night of carousal.

So before you start hitting on our legislators, think of the damage those in other states and provinces can do.

HEALTH NOTES

Schools part of lesson in good nutrition

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Monday Oct. 11, the Board of Health had its regular meeting, and predictably, the issue of the progress of our effort on school nutrition came up.

Joe Godzik (health agent) and I reported the results of our meeting last Thursday with Ted Malvey, school superintendent; Rick Flynn, chairman of the School Committee; and Dave Levy, manager of the school cafeteria. The consensus of school officials at that meeting was since there are not very many obese kids in the schools, and the menus at all schools far exceed federal and state standards for nutrition and content, there isn't a problem. Moreover, the other problem exists with some small fraction of the students: that of undernourishment to become fashionably thin.

The argument was made that even the refreshments offered at sports events were appropriate since they provide electrolytes and calories to replace those being used during strenuous activity. The Board of Health considered these arguments, and concluded that the school indeed had an admirable and well-run program which was vastly better than that in place last year.

...when the intense exercise stops, bad eating habits learned at school will lead to later overweight problems.

Still, there was the concern that what was being left unsaid was that with a very high fraction of the student population involved in active sports programs and other activities which burn lots of calories, when the intense exercise stops, bad eating habits learned at school will lead to later overweight problems.

The Board sees the issue as a matter of education; pointing the way to a healthier lifestyle. Moreover, we perceive that with conflicting claims and assertions about what good nutrition involves, there should be a source for the latest and best nutrition information available for our educational authorities.

The Board of Health has every confidence that, given appropriate information, the School Committee will enable the school administration to make appropriate decisions about school menus.

We will probably never dictate school lunch menus. We will as a matter of duty, continue to review student menus and offer to the school administration a summary of the best information on student nutrition that we can make available. For this activity, we believe we need a committee of nutritionists and food service professionals with sufficient knowledge and background to advise us of current best nutrition practice. We will pass this information along to the school administration along with our observations. We will also report progress to you through these Health Notes.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Martin will be discussing his latest book "Harvard Yard". Harvard historian, Peter Fallon, as well as other characters from Martin's best-selling "Back Bay" return in "Harvard Yard". The story centers on a manuscript by William Shakespeare which was given to John Harvard the University's benefactor and namesake. The hand written play was originally thought to be lost in the fire that destroyed the Harvard library in the late 17th century however Peter discovers evidence to the contrary, and the search is on!

William Martin is part of a long line of Irish storytellers-keepers of a familial oral tradition who could make tall tales from their youth in the Depression sound like epic adventures. "Publishers Weekly" calls Martin "A storyteller whose smoothness equals his ambition." William Martin is a native of Boston, a graduate of Harvard University, and a Harvard parent (his son is currently a senior at the university). His other novels include "Citizen Washington", "Annapolis", "Cape Cod", "Back Bay", "The Rising of the Moon", and "Nerve Endings". This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Mitt and Arnold have the same budget deficit problem

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

There can't be much question: Mitt has the same problem as Arnold.

While each major budget move Gov. Schwarzenegger makes will receive national scrutiny, he faces difficulties no different than those confronting almost every governor this year — including his compatriot in ideology, Gov. Romney. California's deficit is $8 billion and Schwarzenegger must address it at once with the eyes of America upon him. At $2 billion, Massachusetts' is proportionately just as bad, and — completely out of public view — Romney has already begun to take it on.

That is to say, his department heads have. October is actually when the most important and difficult spending decisions are made, as cabinet secretaries, commissioners and department directors prepare and submit spending plans that together form the first draft of the ballyhooed budget the governor files in January.

This is where the real cutting has to take place if the budget problem is to be solved. And while big fights over big proposals will grab lots of ink and airtime later on, the true pain and struggling with numbers is occurring right now, in managers' offices. More than one insider used the word "ugly" to describe the process of identifying whose job to get rid of and what services to cancel.

In the central budgeting office, at the Secretary for Administration and Finance level, Eric Kriss is continuing to wrangle managers across the bureaucracy to use an approach that could save a lot if they take it seriously — and let go of programs that might have outlived their peak usefulness. The approach, zero-based budgeting, is complicated by the need to make the spending bottom line match the revenue numbers in this fiscal crisis.

The scope and nature of the crisis were laid out by Senate Ways and Means Chairwoman Therese Murray last week. The two biggest spending problems are a 12 percent increase in Medicaid and a need to increase spending to secure the integrity of the pension system for state employees. Murray said pension spending should rise $621 million this year. On the revenue side, Romney is as limited as Schwarzenegger. The Legislature raised taxes in 2001, and Romney says he won't let them do it again; Murray said she's not ready to entertain taxes as a way out. Romney raised fees by hundreds of millions of dollars last year (look for Schwarzenegger to play that card soon). All that's left are deep cuts and use of reserves, with Romney's popularity just as much at stake as that of his cut counterpart.

• Early childhood for all will solve problems, save money, ads claim — A group of experts on children and education announced a major lobbying effort, underpinned by a major ad campaign, to convince the public that early childhood education for every child 3 to 5 years old should be funded by the state. Such a system would cost upwards of $1 billion, but advocates said early childhood ed saves money on special education and social problems later. House Speaker Thomas Finneran noted he's an advocate of such education, but sounded skeptical as to the notion that now is the time to round up support for huge new spending initiatives.

• Docs say medical malpractice reform needed now — Business groups such as the National Federal of Independent Business said capping non-economic (i.e., punitive and emotional) damages and eliminating joint liability would keep medical costs, and therefore insurance costs, in check for the business community. But testimony from plaintiffs' attorneys and citizens such as John McCormack, who described carrying his daughter's body from her hospital bed to the morgue after she was killed by alleged malpractice, made clear how difficult a road such damage-cap legislation faces in the Legislature.

• Rate proposals are now all in to the commissioner — Attorney General Thomas Reilly said auto rates should neither rise nor fall in 2004. The auto industry has asked Insurance Commissioner Julianne Bower for a 12 percent rate hike. Analysts in Bower's division recommended she impose a 3 to 4 percent hike for the next calendar year, citing a big jump in medical costs this year. That increase would mean a $41 to $51 hike in premiums annually statewide. Rate hearings will commence in the next few weeks.

• Bar board general counsel fined for writing on state time — Michael Frederickson will pay $5,000 for violating the state's conflict of interest law by using his office, office equipment and hours to work on his novels. He'll pay another $5,000 fine to reimburse the Board of Bar Overseers for the time he and his subordinates spent on the projects and the value of equipment used. He will keep his job, and in fact earned praise from his employers in the Globe. Frederick is the author "A Cinderella Affidavit" (1999) and "Witness for the Dead." (2001).

• Galvin taps BU professor to be ethics commissioner — Boston University law professor Tracey Maclin has been named as Secretary of State William Galvin's appointee to the five-member State Ethics Commission. Maclin is a graduate of Tufts University and Columbia Law School and he's taught at the Harvard, Cornell and University of Kentucky law schools. Last Saturday brought another Ethics Commission vacancy when Chairman Augustus Wagner stepped down upon the expiration of his five-year term. Gov. Romney gets to name his successor and news of that appointment is expected shortly.

• Sunday sales of liquor approved, rejected, still in limbo — A bill authorizing Sunday sales of alcohol in the Bay State emerged quickly, won initial approval, but then was rejected on a 61-83 tally. Reconsideration is still pending, and though another reversal is considered unlikely, it would not be a shock either; Sunday-sales proponent Daniel Bosley is expected to round up as many votes as possible once he recovers from a respiratory infection.

Bradley backs bill to expand state DNA database

Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, voted to enact S187 which proposes to expand the Commonwealth's DNA database to include all convicted felons.

The expansion of the state's DNA database is a tool in fighting crime and promoting public safety. A larger pool of samples would result in the identification of criminals earlier in their careers: thereby preventing future serious crimes. Not only would offenders be more quickly apprehended, but the innocent would be exonerated more quickly. FBI statistics show that DNA evidence excludes the primary suspect in more than 25 percent of FBI sexual assault investigations.

Under current law, persons convicted of 33 violent offenses – such as murder, rape, kidnapping and armed burglary - are required to submit a sample to the Massachusetts DNA database. By the time an offender is convicted of one of those 33 offenses, he has already committed an average of 34 crimes.

Any person convicted of an offense punishable by imprisonment in state prison would be required to submit a DNA sample. Youthful offenders who commit an offense that would carry the same penalty and be considered a felony if committed by an adult would also be required to submit a sample. Any person convicted of such an offense who is currently incarcerated and has not previously submitted a DNA sample would be required to do so. Former offenders currently on probation or parole as a result of such a conviction would be required to submit a DNA sample.

"As a former prosecutor, I am happy that this important legislation has moved closer to becoming law," Bradley said. "This bill will save lives and at the same time reduce the risk of wrongful convictions."

The cost of the expansion of the state's DNA database, given its great impact on public safety, is extremely modest. Federal funds from the National Institutes for Justice have paid for almost all of the cost of the collection and testing for the DNA samples now in the Massachusetts database. Federal funds may be available for several more years.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on three roll calls and local senators' votes on two roll calls from the week of October 6-10.

EXPAND CIVIL COMMITMENT FOR SEX OFFENDERS (S 1005)

Senate 40-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill expanding the state's current civil commitment law that allows a judge to determine that some sexually dangerous prisoners convicted of specific sex crimes be kept locked up in treatment centers for one year to life after they complete their prison sentences. The measure adds new crimes to the list of offenses for which the offender could be civilly committed including child pornography, kidnapping, forcing children into prostitution, open and gross lewdness and any other offense in which "the facts suggest a sexual motivation." The proposal also makes an offender who is in prison for a non-sex-related crime eligible for civil commitment if he previously served time in prison for one of the sex-related crimes on the list. Supporters said current law includes too many loopholes by omitting many sexual-related crimes from the list and argued that this expansion would help protect the public by ensuring that more incurable, sexually dangerous predators are kept behind bars and do not go out and commit additional sex crimes. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Y

REPORT FIRES IN SCHOOLS (S 1372)

Senate 39-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill requiring all public and private school principals to immediately report to the local fire department any incident involving the unauthorized ignition of any fire in the school building. The reporting is required regardless of the size of the fire or whether there was a response by the fire department. Supporters said the filing of the bill was prompted by the case of a student who set a small fire that was not reported to the fire department. The student's setting of a second, larger fire could have been prevented if the first one was reported and the child received help through the cooperation of the fire department and school officials. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

SUNDAY OPENINGS FOR LIQUOR STORES (H 1474)

House 64-88, rejected a bill allowing liquor stores to open at noon on Sundays if they receive approval from their city or town's licensing authority. The measure requires any Sunday employees to be paid time and one-half and prohibits employees from being forced to work on Sundays. Current law allows these stores to seek local approval to be open at noon on the Sunday before Thanksgiving through the Sunday until New Year's Day and every Sunday if the store is located within 10 miles of the New Hampshire or Vermont border— two states that allow Sunday openings. Supporters said it is time to leave this decision up to local cities and towns and noted that communities on the New Hampshire and Vermont border currently have an unfair advantage. They said that Sunday openings would generate up to $2.1 million in additional tax revenue and argued it is unfair that other retailers are allowed to be open on Sundays. Opponents said Sunday openings would force small storeowners who want to remain competitive to work on their only day off or to pay employees extra money. They noted that Sunday is still considered to be different than all other days and argued that few people are complaining about Sunday liquor store closings. (A "Yea" vote is for the expanded Sunday openings. A "Nay" vote is against the expansion).

PAY EMPLOYEES TIME AND ONE-HALF (H 1474)

House 6-147, rejected an amendment striking a provision requiring liquor store employers with more than seven employees to pay time and one-half to their Sunday workers. Amendment supporters said it is illogical for the state to imply that Sundays are like any other day of the week and then to mandate that employees be paid more money on Sundays. Amendment opponents said the time and one-half requirement applies to employees who work on Sundays at other retail stores and argued that it should also apply to liquor stores. (A "Yea" vote is for striking the time and one-half requirement. A "Nay" vote is against striking it and therefore favors the requirement).

N

ALLOW OPENING ONLY SIX DAYS PER WEEK (H 1474)

House 8-145, rejected an amendment that would permit Sunday openings of liquor stores but prohibit them from being open more than six days per week. Amendment supporters said this is modeled after a New York law and is a fair compromise that would allow stores to continue to remain open six days per week but give them the power to choose the six specific days. Amendment opponents said the amendment is designed to kill the bill and would result in most stores choosing to remain closed on Sundays because they do not want to give up weekday business. (A "Yea" vote is for the six day per week restriction. A "Nay" vote is against the restriction).

Field hockey team heads down stretch a game under all important .500 mark

By William Wassersug
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset field hockey team will have its hands full if its going to make the MIAA tournament.

After dropping two of three games last week, Cohasset checked in with a 5-6 mark with five games to go as of Oct. 14.

To make the tournament, the team needs to compile six points in its final five games, with one point awarded for a tie and two for a win.

Despite the two losses, coach Deb Bostwick was upbeat about the way her team has played.

On Oct. 14, Cohasset turned in an impressive 7-0 win over an improving Sturgis squad.

"It was 4-0 at the half, but I wasn't impressed," Bostwick said. "I played all my kids in the first half, including a few junior varsity kids."

Among the junior varsity players making an impact were Aaron Bagley and Brooke Allen.

"Brooke Allen was very strong on the forward line," Bostwick said. "She's going to be a good prospect for next year. She scored her first varsity goal today. Aaron is my backup goalie on the JV. Today, I let him play defense. He did a great job. He's got good speed. He played well for us today."

In the Sturgis win, Bostwick told her charges they needed to focus more, especially with a game against Hull the next day.

"We have Hull under the lights tomorrow (result unavailable at press time)," she said. "Anything can happen there, especially on their field. You never know what kind of bounces you'll get there. We beat them 5-0 earlier, but I knew we'd have to play better if we're going to win at Hull."

The chat with the team worked.

Crusaders crunched

Cohasset gridders improve to 4-0 with a 28-0 whitewashing of Carver

The Cohasset football Skippers were clicking on all cylinders Friday night, as they opened the South Shore League portion of their schedule with a resounding 28-0 win over the Crusaders of Carver at Alumni Field.

Homecoming Football

Friday, 6 p.m.

The Skippers rode the blocking of the offensive line to three rushing scores in the second quarter and combined that with an earlier aerial assault, which led to a touchdown, and the efforts of the league's leading defensive squad.

Carver received the opening kickoff at their own 38 yard line. The Skippers defense — led this week by senior defensive end Rob Carpenter's eight tackles, QB sack, and a fumble recovery, and junior linebacker Crandon Leahy's seven tackles, and a blocked punt — forced the Crusaders to the first of five punt attempts.

The Skippers fielded the punt at their own 42-yard line. Their first drive included 25 yards rushing by senior tailback DeWayne Morris, along with pass completions to senior tight end Sean Connolly for eight yards, junior wideout D J Silvia for 18 yards, and a three-yard touchdown pass from senior QB Mike Dooley to senior wideout Chris Bilodeau. Dooley then handled an errant snap on the extra point attempt and drilled a two point conversion pass to junior tight end Crandon Leahy for an 8-0 lead with 2:44 left in the first quarter.

Leahy's third down sack forced Carver to punt on their second possession and Cohasset started from Carver's 45-yard line. Dooley raced around the

Turning things around

Three straight wins thrusts girls soccer team back into playoff picture

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

In just 72 hours, the Cohasset girls soccer season went from mildly disappointing to positively uplifting.

After a sweep of Abington, Carver and Harwich last week, the girls are five points away from returning to the state tournament.

The week got off to a fantastic start with a 3-2 win at Abington last Tuesday. Junior forward Casey Anderson led the Skippers attack with two goals, as the team also got a solid defensive effort, led by junior Christine Lovallo.

Anderson scored the game-winning goal in the 44th minute with a corner kick that bent into the back of the net.

It was her fourth score of the year, but easily her finest.

"Everyone was in awe after that," head coach Deb Beal said after the game. "This game was huge for Casey. Putting those two home can only help her be better."

Although Cohasset outplayed Abington for most of the first half, the score was tied, 2-2, after 40 minutes. Anderson started the scoring in the 15th minute, finishing a point-blank opportunity off of a nice pass from Leah McMorris.

Fifteen minutes later, a corner kick from Gillian Weber deflected to the feet of senior midfielder Jenn Buckley, who put it into the net for a 2-0 lead.

The last 10 minutes of the half belonged to the Green Wave, as they got two quick goals to even the score. They almost had a third as Valerie Jarvis, whose goal brought Abington to within one, nearly put her team ahead with a header that went off the crossbar.

The momentum clearly belonged to Abington going into the half, but Cohasset took it right back after the second half whistle. Consistent pressure from Buckley and striker Lindsay Kennedy kept the heat on Abington's defense, leading up to Anderson's corner.

It was the Skippers game

Evening out for the better

Boys soccer team plays well in loss to Carver

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Fortuitous bounces often play a big part in determining soccer game outcomes. However, in most case, things even out in the end, even if it takes a few games for that to happen.

Things arguably evened out between the Carver and Cohasset boys soccer teams last Wednesday, as Carver pulled out a hard-fought 2-1 win over the visiting Skippers. Cohasset arguably outplayed the Crusaders in the contest, but the bounces simply went the way of the hosts, just as they did the first time around back in Cohasset when a John Andrade goal inside the final minute lifted Cohasset to a 1-0 win.

"We got the bounces last time and won despite being outplayed, and the same thing happened in Carver this time around, where I thought we were the better team" said first year Cohasset coach Rob Leary.

"At this stage of the season, you want to see your team playing its best, especially in big games, and we played very well in that one. We're preparing for the state tourney, and we took some positive out of that game with Carver."
Cohasset boys soccer coach Rob Leary

The win broke a tie for second place in the South Shore League between Carver (8-2 in SSL, 10-2-1 overall) and Cohasset (10-3, 9-3). Oddly, though, coach Leary still feels he got the better of the "break even" deal.

"At this stage of the season, you want to see your team playing its best, especially in big games, and we played very well in that one," said Leary, a former head coach at Rockland High. "We're preparing for the state tourney, and we took some positive out of that game with Carver."

The tourney clincher actually came on Friday, as the Skippers cruised past SSL rival Harwich, 5-0. They then rolled over equally hapless league foe Hull at home on Tuesday by the same score to move to 10-3 on the season, 9-3 in league play.

Senior captain Chris Clark scored four goals in the former win, a pair in the first half followed by another deuce in the opening minutes of the second half to make this one a laugher and end his day of play. Aidan Buick scored the other goal.

Clark scored another against Hull to raise his team best scoring total to 13 points (nine goals, four assists). Clark's fellow captain Dave Santiago caught right back up, though, scoring twice to match that nine goal, four assist output.

The other goals in this win that wrapped up South Shore League play for the Skippers came from JT Oronte and Sam Steele.

Coach Leary took a lot less from these two wins than he did the Carver loss, noting simply "we did what we were supposed to against a couple of teams that are struggling."

This week coming up is the one the rookie head coach feels will tell a lot more about his team. The Skippers kick off their run of four straight games against bigger Patriot League opponents by travelling to Hanover (4-7-2) today (3:30 p.m.). They'll the host Scituate on Saturday as part of the homecoming weekend festivities and then hit the road again to face unbeaten Hingham (12-0-1) on Monday before returning home Friday for go-round number two with Hanover. They'll wrap up the season on the 27th with Coyle Cassidy coming to town

"The Patriot League is a tough league, and these should be some good tests for us," offered Leary. "Hanover is always a tough team, and Hingham is rolling over everyone. It would be great if we could give them a battle."

after that, as they had far more chances near the net than their opponents.

"I've been trying to challenge the team to take risks, and I think they did that [against Abington]," Beal said. "Grabbing the win tonight was huge."

Arguably bigger was their win over Carver the following night at Alumni Field.

In a rematch of a frustrating 4-2 loss just nine days earlier, the Skippers came out strong from the start. Beal has preached to her team all season long about the importance of the first five minutes of the game, and the momentum of the Abington victory carried itself into the Carver match.

"They were playing great soccer; it was fun to watch," the coach said.

The starters were playing so well that Beal altered her substitution patterns in the first half. The coach said she typically substitutes in eight-minute shifts, but she did not make her first change on Wednesday until the 14th minute.

Although Beal said the fact that Carver's varsity team had to sit around for an hour and a half to watch the JV game may have led them to come out flat, she gave most of the credit to the aggressiveness of her players.

"We came out of the gate so fast and so strong," she said. "We got every ball out of the air, and got every first touch."

Anderson scored the game's only goal in the 68th minute, and keeper CeCelia Chapman made 10 saves to record her fourth shutout of the year.

"I knew we were capable of beating them," Beal said. "We played so well all-around."

On Friday, Cohasset got off to a slow start in the first few minutes at Harwich, but picked it up quickly and had a 4-0 lead at halftime. The Skippers cruised after that, and finished with a 6-0 win.

Cohasset now stands at 6-6-1 overall, with a 6-4-1 record in the South Shore League. Should the Skippers beat Hull today, the girls can finish tied for second in the league if Mashpee beats Carver in their league finale.

More importantly, the team needs either three wins or two wins and a tie to qualify for the state tournament.

Besides a tough match with Scituate on Saturday, Cohasset has winnable games against Hull, Holbrook and Cape Cod Academy twice.

right end on an option play for 33 yards, then picked up nine more yards around the left end. Junior fullback Ted Straughn then scored the first of two touchdowns on the night, as he followed the lead blocking of the Skippers right side — senior captain Steve Davis at right guard, sophomore Dan McCarthy at right tackle, and Connolly at tight end.

Connolly then converted on the extra point and Cohasset had a 15-0 advantage with 9:59 left in the first half

Junior defensive tackle Leo Clougherty stopped the Crusaders cold on a fourth-and-one at their own 45 yard line on the next series and Cohasset took over on down

Morris ran for eight yards, then Silvia hauled in a 23 yard pass from Dooley for a first down. The five play drive culminated with Morris sprinting left behind senior captain Tony Truglia at center, sophomore left guard Nick Arment and senior left tackle Dan Tarpey, and with the downfield blocking of Connolly, Straughn and Bilodeau, they insured Morris of a free waltz into the end zone. Connolly sent the extra point conversion in the direction of the full moon and the Skippers were cruising with a 22-0 lead half way through the second quarter.

Carver mishandled the kickoff and Bilodeau recovered for Cohasset at the Crusaders 33-yard line. Running the ball on every play from here on out, the Skippers marched down to the 8-yard line before Straughn barreled into the end zone again behind the right side of the O-Line. Cohasset 28, Carver 0 with 0:52 left before halftime.

The second half saw the Skippers defense force three more Carver punts. Junior defensive end Kelvin Ferriera (six tackles) tackled the Carver punter on the first botched attempt, and Leahy blocked the second attempt late in the third quarter.

Truglia, playing both ways in the absence of junior Matt Casey (neck strain), had seven tackles from his linebacker slot to go along with six from Straughn at the other outside slot, while junior defensive tackle Matt Baroudi, who has been a rock in the middle of the defensive front, chipped in with five tackles.

Offensively in the second half, the Skippers kept it on the ground, with junior DB/punter Joe Durkin seeing action from the tailback slot, along with junior Joey Kehoe and senior Jamie Litchfield. Junior Brendan Michaud led the way on a 19-yard burst by Morris from his fullback position, and sophomore Dave McKenna provided lead blocking for freshman tailback Anthony DiPaolo on four carries late in the fourth quarter.

Also seeing action for the Skippers in the fourth quarter were underclassmen Justin Wood, Conor Holway, Corbin Faber, Colin Conway, Justin Alexander, Nick Cambi, Ben Masotta, John Keniley, John Burgoon, Paul St Pierre, Colin Smith, Trip Harper, Scott Wakefield, Robert Silvia, Rick Grassie, Jared Dick, Chris Bryan, Nick Zappolo, Blain Morin, Johm Harrington, and Fletcher Smalzel.

Next Up

The Skippers play host to the Falcons of Mashpee tomorrow night with a 6 PM Homecoming kickoff. Avoid the rush hour traffic, take a half day off (the economy is own the upswing anyway) and cheer on the Skippers to their fifth victory. Make a night of it and schedule your post game dinner reservations at Atlantica for the 8:30 sitting. Mashpee opened up their South Shore League schedule with a 7-7 tie at home last Friday night against the preseason League favorite Norwell Clippers. They had three interceptions to halt Clipper drives.

Cohasset prevailed at Mashpee last year by the score of 19-6 with a balanced offensive attack and stingy defense. This years defense unit, under the direction of long time Asst Coach Robert Silvia, has allowed a mire 25 points over four games, while Head Coach Tony Rolfe has directed the offense to 77 points over four games.

Playing out the string

Cohasset golfers play for pride after postseason run comes up just short

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High golf team will play out the string next Wednesday when Cape Cod Academy comes to town for the second half of a home-and-home arrangement.

The Skippers bested CCA on the Cape last Wednesday, 28.5-25.5, so they should have a good shot at finishing the season with a two game winning streak and a record of 7-8-1.

"It would have been nice if this last match was for something other than bragging rights," said third year coach Torin Sweeney. "We made a great run to the tourney, but we came up just short. What are you going to do?"

The Skippers nearly stunned league powers Abington and Norwell on their home courses over the last two weeks, one hole making the difference between a win and a tie in both matches, as Cohasset fell in each by the same 28-26 score. A tie in either of those matches, and Wednesday's finale would have been played with a postseason berth on the line.

The win over Cape Cod Academy featured a superb effort from Cohasset's number on player, freshman Kevin Barber, who shot a three over 39 to best a nationally ranked female player, 5-4.

"Kevin has been just an incredible surprise this year," said Sweeney. "He really came on to solidify the top of our lineup over the second half of the season."

Juniors Jack Carroll and Tim Pilczak, playing out of the fourth and fifth spots, both took 6.5 of a possible nine points out of their respective spots in the order.

The team will lose seniors Mike Devine and captain Mike Hajjar, who played out of the second and third spots to close the season, to graduation. Nevertheless, coach Sweeney believes he'll be in much better shape to start next season than he was at the beginning of this one, given his knowledge on the returning core of Barber and juniors Pilczak, Carroll, Colin Magruder, Ricky Lordan and Chris Simms.

"That'll be a big advantage for me," noted Sweeney. "The big obstacle for me early on was getting the lineup squared away, finding out who the real players were. My juniors really came on toward the end of the year, so I know what I've got in them.

"We had depth at the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth spots, but it took me a while to figure out one, two, three and four. Once I got that settled, that's what we really started to take off."

Cohasset's top four golfers will play in this Thursday's All-League meet at Cranberry Valley in Harwich.

Barber, whose average for the season per nine holes is right around 40, will represent Cohasset at the Div. 3 sectionals on Monday.

in the second half," Bostwick said.

"Especially their clearing plays. The clearing plays were book perfect. The sweeper came in, got it out to the halfback and they got it to the wing. I can't believe how many times they did it so well. It turned into a nice victory."

Bostwick was pleased with several other players.

"Liz Condos played fullback and she was stopping plays all over," Bostwick said. "She used her aggressiveness well. Christina St. Pierre went from halfback to forward and she's been pretty productive. Today she had some good passing to Courtney and Katie."

Katie was Katie James who had two goals and an assist in the win.

Courtney Caron led the offense with four goals and an assist.

"I didn't realize she scored her fourth goal," Bostwick said. "I was so wrapped up in substitutions that I missed her second goal. Usually I let someone get the hat trick and take them out. I didn't realize she had her third."

Jessie Guild, Kristen Howard and Corey Evans each added assists.

"Corey Evans played her best game," Bostwick said. "She had a great game."

In earlier action, Cohasset dropped a 2-1 decision at Carver and a 7-1 loss to Harwich.

The Carver loss was a tough one.

"We started off good at Carver," Bostwick said. "We scored 19 seconds into the game. Frannie Noble had a great drive. She drilled down the line and got the ball to Courtney and Courtney scored. She got ahead of everyone and went one-on-one with the goalie."

For Noble, the assist was an important step.

"Frannie had been out with an infection and had been in and out for two weeks," Bostwick said. "This was one of her first games back."

Bostwick thought the early goal could have set the tone.

"When we scored so quickly, Carver was taken back," Bostwick said. "But they came back. Less than four minutes later they pushed the ball downfield and caused a defensive corner. When they had that, (Carver's Kathleen Pinto) was wide open. I told the girls to watch out for her, but she still scored.

Kathleen is a phenomenal player. She's big, fast and strong. She's a powerful player."

Courtney Caron is on a scoring tear for the Lady Skippers, punching home five goals in the last two games.

Bostwick, who teaches and coaches girls basketball at Carver High, said Pinto and Lindsey Hobbs made things rough on her team.

On what turned out to be the game winner for Carver, it was Pinto and Hobbs that made the difference.

"I told the girls not to leave her open, then Lindsey goes right to Kathleen. My striker sprinted out, then she suddenly stopped. That gave Kathleen time to tee up and she scored. That was the game."

Despite falling behind, Bostwick never felt her team was out of the game.

"I told the girls they had to pick it up," she said. "This was the first game I only used three subs. That's not like me. Usually I play a lot of players.

This time, the girls were giving their all in the second half. We had 17 shots on their goalie. She was making some nice stops."

Bostwick felt her front line of Caron, James and Guild played extremely well.

"They were my forward line the whole second half," she said. "Our weakness in this game was the midfield. Their mids had one step on my midfielders. My offensive line was a little better than Carver's, but Carver had that strong midfield and one individual forward who could score."

Bostwick said, defensively, her sweeper Rachel Doyle played exceptionally well, but was matched by Carver sweeper Nicole Babcock.

"My sweeper Rachel Doyle is one of the best in the league," she said. "But Nicole matches up. She played one of the best games I've seen her play in the four years I've seen her play. She shut our offense down and helped their goalie. I'm not saying Rachel didn't do the same. Rachel was laid out in front of the goal a few times. We had 17 shots to their 19."

Bostwick was impressed with the way her team played down the stretch.

"We dominated the second half," she said. "My girls tried so hard. The bench was cheering them on. It was a tough loss, but a good loss. We did everything OK, but the other team found those little holes and took advantage of the two mistakes we made. That's what good teams do. They capitalize on mistakes. They come here next week. We'll see what happens."

Bostwick said she was pleased with several players in the loss.

"Caitlin Condon played a fabulous game in net," she said. "Rachel Doyle was outstanding at sweeper. Danielle Pinkus and Kelly Hurley each played great and Carling Sturino had a great game. Jessie Guild played well too."

Against Harwich, the 7-1 score wasn't an indicator of the way Cohasset played.

"We were 100 percent better this time than we were the last time we played them," Bostwick said. "At the half it was 4-1. This was the first time we've scored on them since they joined the league. Then they only scored three in the second half. That's pretty good for us. It was a moral victory."

Bostwick said playing at Harwich is an adventure in itself.

"You have the other side of the bridge officiating," she said. "This game they were good. They kept things under control. Then there's the field. It's like playing on a putting green. They have a synthetic grass. It's very good to play on. The game is faster, so you have to adjust your cutting moves and stick handling. You don't get the bounces you get on our field. You need to have set plays. When you're used to playing on that there are a lot of things you can do."

Katie James scored Cohasset's goal with assists from Noble and Caron.

"It was a pretty goal," Bostwick said about her squad's score. "It went Frannie to Courtney to Katie."

COASTAL STARS REPORT

The Coastal Stars Squirt "B1" team got off on the right foot Saturday, with a 5-0 win over Norwood in their season opener.

The Stars withstood some early pressure from Norwood and began to carry the play midway through the first period as the entire team skated hard, moved the puck well and won the battles along the boards.

Bobby Parelli scored the first goal of the season, tucking in a rebound, with assists from John Kenney and Neil Conway.

Moments later, Mike Carbone went hard to the net and wristed a loose puck past the goalie to give the Stars a 2-0 lead. Ross Horan assisted on the goal.

The Norwood goalie kept it close in the second period, making several good stops, including one on Center Carter Denton, who played a strong two-way game.

Defenseman Bobby Harrington picked up the only goal of the period as he moved in from the right point and his shot found the back of the net.

In the third period, Parelli and Carbone secured the win with their second goals of the game, both putting home loose pucks in front of the Norwood net.

Ryan Talanian tallied his first point of the season with an assist on the Carbone goal.

The defensive pairings of Brian Ford with Harrington and DJ Evans with Jared Coletta controlled their end of the ice throughout the game, keeping the front of the net clear and moving the puck quickly out of their zone. They only allowed a handful of shots on goal, and goalie Danny Durkin handled them all, earning the shutout.

The Squirt C3 kicked of their season Saturday with a 7-3 victory against Pembroke.

After falling behind, 1-0, Willy Brown notched the first goal of the season with a hard shot from the right slot.

Shortly before the end of the first period, Mike Masciulli gave the Stars their first lead by swooping in and cleaning up on a loose puck in front of the net.

The second period was all Stars, as Defenseman Justin Hendriksen threw the puck up the left boards to a streaking Brown who notched his second score of the game. With one minute to go in the period, Winger Sam Labo fed Masciulli who slammed home his second from in front of the net.

Netminder Alec Hurd was stellar between the pipes as he turned away at least a dozen shots in the second period including a Pembroke breakaway.

Despite the Stars 4-1 lead, there was no quit in Pembroke as they converted two quick goals to start the third period.

At this point, wingers Ally Ryan, John Sinkins, and Nick Craig got their second wind and crashed the offensive boards, continually throwing the puck in front of the Pembroke net. Center Vinny Calorio converted one of these passes, lifting the puck just under the cross bar for his 1st goal.

The defensive tandems of Ryan Foohey with Mike Foley and Mike Timcoe with Hendriksen, instrumental in keeping most the play in Pembroke's end of the ice, stiffened up and kept the puck away from the Stars net for the remainder of the period.

Masciulli saved his best for last, combining stickhandling and hustle to score his third and fourth goals and secure a Stars victory.

Joshua's Run this Saturday

The Seventh Annual Joshua's Run for the Jimmy Fund is scheduled for Oct. 18, at Peggotty Beach. This family event which has raised $111,000 for the Jimmy Fund since its inception in 1996, has a new fall date and is expected to be bigger and better than ever.

Fight leads to arrests

Sgt. William Quigley said a minor altercation Saturday night among three men over a comment about a woman resulted in property damage and the arrest of the perpetrators.

The incident took place outside the Legion Hall on Summer Street at about 10:30 p.m.

Keith A. Jackson, 24, of 9 Ash St.; Adam R. Thibault, 22, of 6 Winthrop Road in Hingham; and Jerry Cogill, 25, of 71 Doane St. were arraigned on charges of disorderly conduct, malicious destruction of property over $250 and affray (fighting) in Quincy District Court this week.

The men damaged the railing to the handicap ramp during the fight, Quigley said.

'Lifeboat' author at Buttonwood Books

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset hosts John R. Stilgoe, Norwell resident and professor in the History of Landscape at Harvard University, on Thursday, Oct. 30 from 7-9 p.m. Stilgoe will present his latest work, "Lifeboat".

Stilgoe has been thinking about lifeboats ever since he listened with his father as the kitchen radio announced that the liner Lakonia had caught fire and sunk in the Atlantic in 1963. Stilgoe began to delve into accounts of other disasters at sea. What he found was a trunkful of hair-raising stories-of shipwreck, salvation, seamanship-brilliant and inept, noble sacrifice, insanity, cannibalism, courage and cravenness, even scandal. Stilgoe deals with the lifeboat as a symbol of human optimism, of engineering ingenuity, of bureaucratic ingenuity, of fear and frailty.

Woven through "Lifeboat" are good old-fashioned yarns, thrilling tales of adventure. Stilgoe is the author of numerous books, including "Borderland", "Metropolitan Corridor", and most recently, "Outside Lies Magic" and "Alongshore". This is a free event. Call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

All in the family

Vicki Lawrence brings Mama' to Memorial Hall

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Vicki Lawrence got her big break on "The Carol Burnett Show," because she looked like the star's younger sister. And later, Burnett's decision to change parts in a sketch on the variety program gave Lawrence the biggest role of her career — as the sharp-tongued matriach of a dysfunctional, blue collar family.

"Mama was originally written for Carol, but she decided she would rather play Eunice, which was intended as a role for a guest star. I wasn't even supposed to be in the sketch," explained Lawrence by telephone last week from her southern California home. "When Carol decided to do Eunice, she suggested that I play Mama. The character was one of Carol's many gifts to me."

And one that keeps on giving. Lawrence, 54, first donned the grey wig, granny glasses and orthopedic shoes to play the cantankerous Thelma Harper, known to her offbeat family as Mama, in a 1974 Burnett show segment entitled "Ed and Eunice." The sketches continued until the Burnett show left the air four years later. In 1982, Lawrence was again featured as Mama in a 90-minute television special entitled "Eunice," which starred Carol Burnett and Harvey Korman as Eunice and Ed Higgins. The following year, Lawrence again reprised the role for a NBC-TV sitcom entitled "Mama's Family." This time around, however, Lawrence was the show's star with Burnett and Korman making only occasional guest appearances. The show ran only 35 episodes on the network, but remained in production until 1990 in first-run syndication.

Actress Vicki Lawrence brings her two-woman show to Plymouth Memorial Hall Oct. 26.

These days, Lawrence and her alter ego are teaming for a live show entitled "Vicki Lawrence & Mama — A Two Woman Show" which comes to Plymouth Memorial Hall Oct. 26. Lawrence started her first national tour more than a year ago, with the help of a production team of Burnett alumni, including her husband, Al Schultz, who was the makeup man for the long-running variety show. The pair sketched out the show in their living room with help from comedy writer Monty Aidem and were confident in the material. As the show's first dates neared, however, the star experienced doubts.

"Is this gonna fly in the real world? Or, am I going to be staring at a painting?," Lawrence recalls asking herself. The California native won over that first audience at the Orleans Hotel & Casino in Las Vegas and many more since then with her two-woman show. As Vicki, Lawrence shares personal anecdotes and also performs her only hit song, "The Night the Lights Went Out in Georgia," which earned her a 1973 Gold Record.

With only a five minute break to get into costume, Lawrence is back as Mama. Three decades have passed since Lawrence first put on Mama's curly wig, but one thing hasn't changed, the character is still many years the actress's senior and Lawrence still performs her without any special age make-up.

"If you look closely at Mama's first few appearances on the Burnett show, you can see that I had showgirl make-up on — including huge false eyelashes — under Mama's little glasses. That was Carol's idea. She always wanted to finish on time, and sometimes that meant putting on all the make-up you would need for an entire show at once. When I did the sitcom, people suggested that we needed to do Estelle Getty-style make-up if Mama was going to be convincing. My husband, Al, put his foot down and said there would be no age make-up for Mama. I have always kidded him that he made that decision, because he was a make-up man who wanted to get paid for doing nothing."

Mama may look younger than her years, but age does have its privileges. "She is definitely the diva of the two of us. I have to open for her," says Lawrence. "And Mama still gets to speak her mind. Even when she is off-color and politically incorrect, no one seems to mind, because it's Mama. She can get away with saying almost anything. Grandmas are always right."

A singer and performer since her teens, Lawrence's non-Mama career has included several successful game show stints and even her own talk show. Currently, she has a recurring role on the CBS-TV sitcom "Yes, Dear," playing the wife of old friend and former Burnett show co-star, Tim Conway.

Whatever else she does, however, Lawrence knows it is her first TV work for which she will always be best-known.

"It was like going to the Harvard school of comedy in front of America," Lawrence remembers. "I could have learned the craft just through osmosis."

While she is quick to label Burnett her "mentor," Lawrence also has fond memories of another colleague whom she credits with teaching her the finer points of comedic acting.

"Mama still gets to speak her mind. Even when she is off-color and politically incorrect, no one seems to mind, because it's Mama. She can get away with saying almost anything. Grandmas are always right."
Vicki Lawrence

"I was just out of high school when I first got that show. I couldn't find stage left stage right or the ladies' room," says Lawrence. "Harvey Korman took me under his wing and told me 'You're gonna learn dialect. You're gonna learn props... ' He was either going to teach me or kill me because I was such a goon. I think he hated me, although he wouldn't say that today."

("Vicki Lawrence & Mama - A Two Woman Show" will be performed at Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street, Plymouth, Sunday, Oct. 26 at 7 p.m. For tickets and information, call 866/468-7619 or visit www.plymouthmemorialhall.com)

Bob Romano has the blues

Musician and promoter provides venues for local talent

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Bob "Satch" Romano performs a unique juggling act as a local musician and music promoter.

Romano, a Braintree sales and marketing consultant, has also spent much of his life in and around the music business, mostly at the local level, but not without his share of interaction with nationally known and touring performers, and the sort of related stories and recollections that go with that.

These days, however, the moonlighting musician — a blues harpist and guitarist — and promoter amidst the area club scene is most focused on endeavors he started up back in the mid to late 1990s. Those three projects, based on Romano's own longtime fan-devotion to the blues and blues musicians, are the New Blue Revue — a weekly open-mic blues jam vehicle, the Houserockers — Satch's own blues, rock and R&B band, and the Houserockers side project, a self-named tribute to the Blues Brothers, in which the harpist and a musical partner assume the look, sound, feel and persona of the legendary Jake and Elwood Blues.

"I want to be like a go-to guy for any musicians in and around the South Shore who are into the blues and are looking for a regular outlet where they can drop in and jam."
Bob "Satch" Romano

The New Blue Revue appears every Thursday evening at the Purple Eggplant, Route 18, Abington, and every Friday evening at Jimbo's Next Page, Broad Street, East Weymouth. The Houserockers and the Houserockers' Tribute to the Blues Brothers are mainly available for private parties and corporate functions but also expect to break into a regular schedule of area club dates by early next year.

Romano's New Blue Revue is essentially the ongoing project of what he began on the South Shore in 1994, and has previously graced local venues such as the Yard Rock in Quincy and Helen's Cafe and Ye Olde Brick Grille in Braintree. The musician emphasizes that the current weekly open-mic blues jam works with a rotating cast of 35 area singers and players, and with nearly 100 performing over the Revue's nine years.

"I want to be like a go-to guy for any musicians in and around the South Shore who are into the blues and are looking for a regular outlet where they can drop in and jam," said Romano at his Braintree home. "I also book several area blues bands at some of the neighborhood clubs. And I'm happy to say that these are bands who've emanated from the New Blue Revue open-mic blues jams, who started out sitting in with us then formed their own bands."

"But what I want people to know is that the open-mic jam is not about me. I simply create the format, then invite any musicians who want to come down for any given week and let them shine in the spotlight. In all the nine years I've been doing this, the open-mic jam has

Some new tricks for Three Dog Night

70s hit band rocks Plymouth Oct. 18

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Danny Hutton can feel a certain gratification for keeping Three Dog Night going off-and-on for three-and-a-half decades.

"In this current version of Three Dog Night, we have more original members than the Rolling Stones, and more than Chicago. And I think the spirit of the band is as alive as it ever was," said Hutton by phone from his L.A. home last week.

Reviews of Three Dog Night's live shows have generally been in accord with the band's founder, as the band itself has toured consistently and internationally since 1986, averaging 80-100 shows a year. One of those tour stops is Plymouth Memorial Hall this Saturday evening, Oct. 18 at 7:30 p.m.

Rising from the late 1960s L.A. club scene and record business, Three Dog Night is best remembered as one of the biggest hit-making machines of the early 70s. From 1969 to '74, the band scored 21 consecutive Top 40 hits, including eighteen straight Top 20s, eleven Top 10s, seven No. 1 hits, 7 million-selling singles and 12 straight gold LPs.

Most of those hit singles — "One," "Celebrate," "Mama Told Me Not To Come," "Joy to the World" and "Shambala" were in a pop-friendly hard-rock style with heavy soul/R&B undertones. The band's name, taken from an Australian outback term to describe especially cold nights when one sleeps with three dogs, also symbolized the band's unusual concept of three dynamic, soulful lead vocalists, including originally Cory Wells and Chuck Negron along with Hutton.

Three Dog Night will have the Memorial Hall crowd howling Oct. 18.

In their Top Ten prime, Three Dog Night was well-noted through their hits for giving pop exposure to then little or unknown songwriters, such as Harry Nilsson ("One"), Randy Newman ("Mama Told Me"), Laura Nyro ("Eli's Coming") and even Elton John and Bernie Taupin ("Lady Samantha").

As Hutton recalls, "Back in the late 60s, I was starting up my concept of a vocal trio with Cory (Wells) and Chuck (Negron), and we were then called Redwood. I was also good friends with Brian Wilson at the time. I hung out with him in the studio when the Beach boys were making the Pet Sounds album. And Brian offered to produce Redwood and even gave us our first single, `Darlin',' which the Beach boys later recorded."

"Eventually, Brian got pressure from the other Beach Boys, who felt he was spending too much time with outside projects, and he abandoned his work with us. At that point, our manager said, why don't you get a band together, which we did. We then sat down, listened to all kinds of records to work up material for our act, everything from rock to new singer/songwriter stuff to R&B. This is

Juicy, braised pork chops

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Everyone has experienced the problem with pork chops: dry, tough meat. Since pork is 50 percent leaner than it was when I was growing up, many of the classic cooking methods are no longer appropriate. I wanted to braise the chops (cook in a small amount of liquid) in order to create a quick pan sauce but I also wanted tender, juicy meat.

I found a few recipes in classic books by the likes of Fannie

Farmer and James Beard. In most recipes, the cooking time (either in the oven or on top of the stove) was too short to produce tender meat. I then decided to start with the meat itself to see if different cuts made a difference in the kitchen.

There are two kinds of pork chops commonly available — the loin chop or the rib chop. Loin chops are sold either with or without the bone. I found chops cut 1/2 to 1 1/2 inches. I seasoned the chops and browned them over high heat. Then I added chicken stock (and a few other ingredients) and let them braise until they were tender. The rib chops were more flavorful and took less time to become moist and tender since they contain more fat. The loin chops were slightly dryer and chewier and took longer to cook. (Bone-in was superior since the meat was more flavorful and juicier.) The key with either cut, however, was cooking time. As with a pot roast, pork chops need to be cooked long enough for the meat to break down and become tender.

I tried brining the chops but this added step did not improve the texture although it did make the sauce too salty. To my surprise, however, I found that thinner chops were better than thick ones. The reason? Thicker chops took a very long time to cook (almost two hours, whereas thin chops were done in 30 to 45 minutes) and the balance of sauce to meat was better with less meat.

As for the other ingredients, I included one thinly sliced onion, white wine (I tested and rejected red wine, sherry, cider vinegar, and vermouth), low-sodium chicken stock (regular stock will make this dish too salty), a bay leaf, fresh thyme, Dijon mustard, and fresh parsley. I also tried apples, sauerkraut, and tomato paste, cream and maple syrup but preferred a clean, simple combination of flavors.

JUICY BRAISED PORK CHOPS

Rib chops are preferred since they contain more fat then loin chops but either can be used. If you use the latter, simply increase the cooking time to 45 minutes. Use a light hand when seasoning the chops since the sauce can easily become too salty. Note that bay leaves quickly lose their flavor once the bottle is opened, so make sure that they are fresh and store the rest in the freezer until needed.

4 1/2 to 3/4 inch thick bone-in rib or loin pork chops (rib chops preferred)

Salt and freshly ground pepper

1 tablespoon vegetable oil

1 tablespoon butter

1 medium onion, halved and thinly sliced

1/2 cup dry white wine

1 1/2 cups low-sodium chicken broth

1 bay leaf

1 teaspoon chopped fresh thyme

1/2 teaspoon Dijon mustard

1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley

1. Season the chops lightly with salt and pepper. Heat the oil in a large skillet over high heat. When hot, brown the chops in a single layer until dark golden brown, about 3 to 4 minutes. Turn chops and brown on second side, about 4 minutes longer. Transfer chops to a plate and set aside.

2. Reduce heat to medium and pour off all but 1 tablespoon fat from pan. Add the butter and once it has stopped foaming add the onion. Cook until the onion is translucent and soft and golden brown around the edges, about 7 minutes. Add the wine to the pan, and using a wooden spatula or spoon, scrape up any brown bits from the bottom of the pan. Add the chops back to the pan along with the chicken broth and bay leaf. Bring to a simmer and cook, covered, until the chops are tender, about 30 minutes for rib chops and 45 minutes for loin chops. Remove the chops to a warm platter and tent with aluminum foil.

3. Discard bay leaf and whisk thyme and mustard into the sauce. If necessary, increase heat to medium-high and simmer until sauce is thickened.

Taste for seasonings and adjust with salt and pepper if necessary. Spoon sauce over chops and serve immediately. Serves 4

Lucci to light up Symphony Hall

Susan Lucci's portrayal of the sexy and sensational Erica Kane on "All My Children" has made her a soap opera superstar whose fame transcends daytime. Lucci is also a savvy businesswoman. Her own lines of hair and skincare products, clothing, handbags and a fragrance make her a frequent presence on the Home Shopping Network. Two thriving careers might be too much for some people, but not Lucci, who this fall is on a concert tour with the man who coined the phrase "La Lucci" — Regis Philbin.

"I first met Regis many years ago when he was doing a local television morning show in Los Angeles and he's been a friend ever since. It is wonderful to work with Regis, because he is such a generous performer," Lucci explained recently by telephone from New York. "I really enjoy these concerts. I'm singing some pop, jazz, some standards and some Broadway - all the music I love."

This latest phase in Lucci's professional life can be traced to 1999 when she finally won her Emmy. She did more than just end her legendary losing streak, she also opened the door to a whole new career. "In the interviews I did after the Emmy Awards that year, I was asked what I wanted to do next. I said Broadway, but I never made it clear whether I meant a play or a musical." That decision ended up being made for the actress later that same year when she was approached about replacing Bernadette Peters as Annie Oakley in the Tony Award-winning Broadway revival of "Annie Get Your Gun."

Before long, a friend with gold-plated Broadway credentials offered to help. "Marvin Hamlisch and I had worked together a few years earlier. When he heard about "Annie Get Your Gun," he offered me the chance to come to his New York apartment and sing for him. I asked Marvin what he thought and he was very encouraging. He said to me, 'You can do this. There's no question you can do this.' I knew then that I had a good shot at it."

The award-winning composer was correct, and Lucci made her Broadway debut in the Irving Berlin musical in December 1999 to standing ovations and critical acclaim. "It was an amazing experience. The thrill of performing on stage for a live audience is unlike anything else. I cried almost every night at the curtain call, it was just so emotional."

For the Long Island native, it was also the realization of a childhood dream. "Singing has always been in me. I listened to Broadway albums as a little girl. I learned all the lyrics and acted all the parts. That's where my dream started and really where it has always been."

Susan Lucci appears in concert with Regis Philbin at Symphony Hall, 301 Massachusetts Avenue, Boston Sunday, Oct. 19. For tickets and information, call Symphony Charge at 617/266-1200 or visit www.ticketmaster.com where we began to discover those great new songs by unknown writers. "One" by Harry Nilsson was essentially a failed attempt at a hit single for him. We were able to take those songs that sort of fell through the cracks and find success with them," Hutton said.

Three Dog Night

Hutton added that the new band's manager then booked them an unsigned artist's showcase date at L.A.'s famed Troubador club, playing for reps from the then-hot ABC/Dunhill label. Hutton recalled that after the show, the reps greeted the band and "based on what we just heard," signed them on the spot. Three Dog Night's top-selling albums for ABC/Dunhill contained some of the band's own songs, but mainly used material from outside writers gathered from reel-to-reel and 45 RPM demos, and even the occasional live-in-the-studio audition.

"We decided our approach was going to be that we're going to record the best songs we can find anywhere, not just what we write," Hutton said.

This year, Three Dog Night has two new recorded products for the first time in many years — a live CD recorded with the London Symphony Orchestra, and a live DVD made in Nashville with the Tennessee Symphony Orchestra. Both discs, feature hits from the past with fuller, symphonic arrangements, plus two new songs, said Hutton.

Three Dog Night performs Saturday, Oct. 18 at Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street. For tickets and information, call 866/468-7619 or visit www.plymouthmemorialhall.com)

Romano has the blues

never put together the same band twice," Romano said.

Originally from Dorchester, Romano began playing music in high school and then at college. In the mid 70s, he worked running functions and catering at Howard Johnson's Hotel in Boston. There he remembers sitting in for after-hours jam sessions in the hotel's rehearsal room with players from the bands of James Brown, the Ojays and others rooming for the night while on tour in the city.

After spending most of the 80s out of the music business, Romano re-entered the fray when he bought the Music Doctor CD and tape store in Plymouth's Cordage Park. While there he began collecting Beatles memorabilia, which started a one-thing-to-another chain of events that led to Romano finally finding a way back into the mainstream music business. The twisted path included several Beatles memorabilia shows, working with WBCN promotions, managing a North Shore club band called Street Kid, and eventually meeting area players at the Yard Rock and organizing an open-mic blues jam there.

Romano founded the New Blue Revue in 1996. Since then, it has been a welcome resource for many area musicians who, like him, played in local club bands in previous years — or decades — and would like to get back onstage in front of an audience.

"Musicians around the South Shore are able to make their comebacks through the New Blue Revue," he said. "I create a venue or forum for players who want to return to the scene. Plus, of course, any others who are interested, amateurs or pros."

The New Blue Revue performs every Thursday evening at the Purple Eggplant, Route 18, Abington, and every Friday at Jimbo's Next Page, Broad Street, East Weymouth. For more information or to receive NBR's weekly newsletter email to brom@carlsonsw.com or 781-258-5232.

OCTOBER 16 - 24, 2003

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15

A lunar opposition to Pluto may spark emotional thunderstorms this morning. Keep a low profile. Storm clouds move out by 9:00 a.m., however; fair and sunny astrological weather returns for the remainder of the day. People will be sociable, talkative but easily distracted from practical matters. Influences are best for handling projects that require communication with others, like making phone calls or sending e-mails. Sales and promotion campaigns also get the green light.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16

This is a great day to get things done. Take on a busy work schedule, particularly jobs that require mental focus and concentration. At 5:54 a.m. the Gemini moon becomes inactive until 7:41 a.m., when it enters the sign Cancer. In addition, Mercury prepares to form a flowing 60-degree contact to Pluto. Take time out for yourself this evening; look within and you wi!l find what you need to get back on track.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17

A challenging lunar alignment to Saturn can make for a rough start to this day. People may be moody, hypersensitive. Avoid morning hassles or the blues. Plan to finish old business rather than starting anything new. Venus interacts with Neptune and Jupiter, making for a pleasant evening. Share a special meal with family and close friends.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18

The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:31 a.m., when the Cancer moon becomes inactive. This moon is decreasing in light, and a new moon will culminate next Saturday, October 25. An inactive Cancer moon makes this day prime for puttering around house, handling odds and ends of jobs, cleaning out the clutter. A playful Leo moon arrives at 6:41 p.m. Put on your party hat and go for the good times this evening.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 19

A Leo moon all day prompts you to come from the heart and enjoy life to the fullest. Put all worries and hassles aside; enjoy favorite pastimes, friends and family. The moon interacts with Neptune at 2:21 p.m. and Venus at 6:28 p.m. An applying alignment of Venus to Saturn brings an opportunity to strengthen the ties and add new depth and dimension to key relationships.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20

This week begins on an upbeat note. Take advantage of today's positive planetary influences and take on a full agenda. The moon continues its travel in outgoing Leo, forming easy contacts to Mercury this afternoon and the sun this evening. New beginnings in your business or personal life are recommended.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21

Gear up for a hectic morning. At 12:18 a.m. the Leo moon becomes inactive until 2:01 a.m., when it enters Virgo. A polarity of the moon and Mars is in effect between 6:45-9:45 a.m. Others may be irritable, impatient, difficult to get along with. Compliments will work better than criticism. As the day goes on, however, planetary influences improve considerably. The best way to channel today's influences is to stay busy with practical projects. A lunar alignment to Jupiter generates optimism, enthusiasm this evening.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22

Stress management is important this morning. Resolve to maintain a lighthearted, positive attitude. The Virgo moon forms a challenging 90-degree contact to Pluto at 9:19 a.m. and becomes inactive. After that storm clouds move out, and sunny astrological weather returns. The combination of an inactive moon, sun-Uranus alignment and Neptune station makes this a great day to vacation. Step out of your usual routine and follow your bliss.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23

The moon enters Libra at 5:27 a.m., and the sun enters Scorpio at 4:09 p.m. A Scorpio new moon will culminate in two days, October 25. However, a harmonious 120-degree alignment of Mercury and Uranus takes the spotlight today. Its influence may spark new ideas and sudden insights. Keep an open mind. Be willing to experiment with new techniques or undergo new experiences.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24

The dark side of a new moon is a time for finishing projects and clearing the way for new activities. Others may be pensive, hypersensitive. You can make gains on an inner, spiritual level. Spend time alone. Let go of past hurts and traumas; be more forgiving and willing to meet others halfway. At 7:20 a.m. Mercury moves into Scorpio, where it will remain until November 12.

Planting projects for the fall season

Green thumbs up

Part 3

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Each year, in late September, a delightful surprise appears in the plantings alongside my front walkway. Several clumps of large, satiny, goblet-shaped blooms in an enticing shade of soft, lavender-pink magically emerge among the shrubs and fading perennials. Glistening in the early morning sunlight, these elegant blooms of the autumn crocus (Colchicum spp.) announce the official arrival of the fall season.

Autumn crocuses grow from corms and produce significantly larger flowers than our early spring-blooming crocuses. If the corms are planted during late summer or early autumn in full sun or light shade in fertile, well-drained soils, blossoms up to 8 inches in diameter appear a few weeks later without the presence of foliage. Large clusters of bold, strap-like leaves up to 12 inches long emerge the following spring and persist until early summer, gradually turning yellow as they mature. As with other bulbs whose foliages tend to become unsightly as they cure, these corms are often best planted among daylilies, groundcovers or deciduous shrubs to conceal their dying leaves. Known also as meadow saffron, it should be noted that all parts of these plants are toxic. A derivative of the autumn crocus has been used to alter the genetic composition of daylilies and a variety of other plants.

Despite a number of frosty evenings during the past week, there is still time to plant spring-flowering bulbs. No garden seems complete without a few patches of crocuses, daffodils or tulips and fall is the season for planting these springtime miracles. Choose firm bulbs that are free of soft spots, deep cuts or blemishes. Select the largest specimens of each type of bulb or in the case of daffodils, ones having multiple noses, as these will most likely produce more flowers of greater size.

All bulbs prefer loose, porous soils with excellent drainage to prevent rotting during dormancy. Soils composed of sandy loam are ideal. Heavy clay soils should be amended with sand, peat moss, or compost to improve drainage. Raised beds may be necessary in low, damp locales. Loosen and prepare the soil prior to planting so the roots of the bulbs can develop easily.

While bulbs contain all the nutrients they require to flower the first year, to continue healthy growth and flowering, bulbs need phosphorus, a mineral that moves very slowly through the soil. To ensure its availability in future seasons, mix a teaspoon of superphosphate or bulb booster in the soil at the bottom of the planting hole. Although bone meal serves as an alternative, organic source of this nutrient, you may wish to avoid its use as animals often detect its scent and dig up your newly planted bulbs.

Plant most spring-flowering bulbs at a depth three times their diameter at the widest point. Be sure to read labels for recommended planting depths and keep a ruler handy while planting to ensure reasonable accuracy. Set true bulbs in the planting hole on their flattened end, known as the basal plate, with the tip of the bulb up. The majority of commonly grown spring-flowering bulbs are true bulbs including onions (Alliums), glory-of-the-snow (Chionodoxa), checkered lily and crown imperial (Fritillaria), snow drops (Galanthus), hyacinths, grape hyacinths (Muscari), daffodils (Narcissus), squill (Scilla), lilies (Lilium) and tulips.

Crocuses are corms and should also be planted on their flattened end with the rounded portion of the bulb on top. Greek anemones (Anemone blanda), which produce charming, daisy-like flowers in pink, blue or white set off by deep green divided foliage, are classified as tubers. These oddly shaped bulbs are best soaked for 24 hours prior to planting. Like potatoes, roots and stems emerge from eyes scattered all over the surface so the bulbs have no top or bottom.

The majority of spring-flowering bulbs are best planted in clumps or drifts rather than isolated or in single rows like marching soldiers. For an especially dramatic effect, plant large groupings of a singular variety or clusters of bulbs that bloom at the same time. If a succession of bloom is preferred, select early, midseason and late varieties of tulips or daffodils interspersed with various types of minor bulbs to provide blooms over a long season. I prefer to use a shovel to dig one large hole for each grouping, loosening the soil in the bottom of the hole and spacing the bulbs within that hole. Be sure to firm the soil and water well immediately after planting all bulbs.

If rodents have plagued your bulb plantings in the past, try interplanting their favored tulips and crocuses with narcissus, which are poisonous to the little beasties. Alliums and Fritillaria may also prove useful companions as they produce strong odors that may deter unwanted intruders. As a last resort, plant bulbs in cages of wire or hardware cloth or protect each planting with a strip of wire that can be bent into the ground over the bulbs and covered with soil. The bulbs can still grow through the spaces in the wire and the hidden metal will often deter the digging of chipmunks and squirrels.

While daffodils, tulips and crocuses tend to be the most popular choices, there are numerous delightful bulbs to add beauty to the spring garden. Try something new this fall and watch the miracle unfold next spring.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

YOUR ANALOG HEARING INSTRUMENT

Hearing instrument technology can be divided into two general categories, analog and digital, which refer to the way the instrument's amplifiers process sound. The more traditional analog instruments amplify the continuous sound wave by simply making it larger. Along with a conventional analog instrument, there is a programmable type, which differs in the amount and degree of adjustments the hearing dispenser can perform on the hearing instrument. A programmable instrument allows for adjustment of the amplifier to more precisely match the wearer's hearing loss. Thus, programmable analog hearing devices produce greater fitting flexibility compared with their conventional equivalents due to the hearing dispenser's ability to use a computer to change the way the instrument operates.

Just as trifocals are designed to correct vision for different activities like reading and driving, different hearing instruments are designed to correct hearing in varied situations. Put the many available products for the hearing impaired to good work for you. At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we'll help you choose from among the variety of designs of hearing aids to find the one that best brings the sounds of life back into your life. Call us at 781-337-1144 to arrange a free, painless hearing evaluation at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We offer FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased.

P.S. Many wearers find the flexibility of a programmable instrument to be an important feature when they consider the purchase of a hearing instrument.

Malvey to retire after school year

Search committee to be formed soon

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

At the start of the next school year, part of the reorganization of the schools will include a new superintendent at the helm.

Supt. Edward Malvey has announced his intention to retire, effective in the summer of 2004, after six years in the Cohasset school system. Malvey came to work in Cohasset in the fall of 1998, after former superintendent Stephen Hart stepped down to enter his retirement years.

"I see myself ending my years of service at the top of the game, so to speak," Malvey told the School Committee last week.

The process of replacing a superintendent can be lengthy and will start soon, School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said. The first step will be putting together a search committee, which will consist of people from the school department and the community. Flynn said when Malvey applied for the position six years ago, a consulting firm was hired to conduct a nation-wide search for candidates, but he's not sure that route will be taken again.

"When all was said and done, they came back to us with Dr. Malvey, who was from Connecticut, but they also

Water sale to Hingham on tap

Haddad expected to sign agreement

Cohasset water users will see their rates remain stable while the water distribution system continues to be upgraded.

And the 2,000-unit Erickson Retirement Community in Hingham will have enough water for its residents at a competitive rate.

In what will be touted as a win-win for both entities, the Cohasset Water Department is capping a more than year-long negotiation process to ink a deal to sell up to 300,000 gallons a day to Erickson's Linden Ponds, which is off Whiting Street (Rte. 53) in South Hingham.

Although water commissioner Rob Kasameyer didn't provide a monetary figure, he did say Cohasset would get a

Police shakeup

Two officers on leave

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Officials aren't talking about an apparent shakeup at the Cohasset Police Department that is bound to stir the rumor mill around town.

Anonymous callers to the Mariner said the officers were fired, which Town Manager Mark Haddad adamantly denies.

"The selectmen and I are confident the police department will continue to provide very high quality service and adequate public safety protection."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Haddad and Police Chief Robert Jackson would not name the officers, but it has been reported the men are Sgt. William Quigley and Officer James McLean.

Haddad said he placed two Cohasset police officers on paid administrative leave Monday but declined to comment further, citing privacy and personnel issues.

"The town cannot comment on internal personnel matters," he said. "The town respects each employee's right to privacy and as a policy, considers the public disclosure of individual person-

Eastwood film has Cohasset connection

Norris has role in 'Mystic River'

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Lance Norris of Norfolk Road is used to the limelight and has met a lot of famous people through his radio career.

"I thought 'this is the big time – that's a piece of Hollywood history over there.'"
— Lance Norris

But even the veteran actor of several small movie roles and work in TV commercials admits it was a thrill to work with Clint Eastwood. And seeing production designer Henry Bumstead — who has films such as "To Kill a Mockingbird," "Vertigo" and "The Sting" to his credit — put his part in the new feature film, "Mystic River," in a whole new perspective.

"He's the godfather of set design," Norris says. "I thought 'this is the big time – that's a piece of Hollywood history over there.'"

Norris plays the bartender in one of the intense scenes in the movie that stars Sean Penn, Tim Robbins and Kevin Bacon as three boyhood friends from east Boston who are reunited when Penn's daughter is murdered.

Antiques appraisal comes to Cohasset

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Dusting the cobwebs off one of Grandma's relics to find a stunning antique is sometimes only half as exciting as finding out what it's worth, monetarily speaking. With the introduction of television programs which feature appraisals, such as the Antiques Roadshow on PBS, it seems more and more people have been searching through forgotten nooks and crannies to find the one rare piece that could be worth a small fortune.

The South Shore Art Center Roadshow Antiques Appraisal Day takes place from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., Saturday, Nov. 15.

Now a local organization will get into the act, so to speak, when appraiser Marly Rabstenek returns to her hometown as one of five appraisers who will lend their services to the South Shore Art Center Roadshow Antiques Appraisal Day, to take place from 11a.m.-3 p.m., Saturday, Nov. 15.

Rabstenek specializes in Asian fine art as well as silver, but appraisers will also be on hand to evaluate paintings and prints, jewelry, books and manuscripts, and furniture.

Appraisals will be $15 for one piece and $35 for three pieces, with proceeds going to benefit the South Shore Art Center, and all visitors will receive individ-

Town receives recycling award

Selectman and Recycling Committee member Merle Brown traveled to Worcester earlier this month to accept a plaque on the town's behalf from the Massachusetts Recycling Committee for outstanding efforts in recycling.

Planning Board public hearing is postponed

Only two members of the Planning Board were in attendance at last week's scheduled public hearing on the zoning articles on the special fall Town Meeting Warrant. Selectmen forwarded the proposed zoning articles to the Planning Board on Sept. 25, asking the board conduct the required public hearing before Town Meeting Nov. 17. Although the meeting had been posted in advance, Vice Chairman Bill Good and member Peter Pratt were not enough to fill the quorum. Items on the agenda included illegal apartment amnesty, large house site plan review, and apartment by right downtown. The public hearing will be continued until Nov. 5, when those three issues as well as the underground utility conversion and the political sign bylaw will be discussed.

Charter school proposal sinks

Supt. Edward Malvey said the proposed South Short Maritime Charter School's proposal "did not have a favorable review," by the Department of Education, and will therefore not go through on this round of charter school applications. While it is possible the school could come back next year with a re-draft of the proposal, for now, "The issue is off the table as far as we're concerned," he said.

Bus mileage upped

Based on information given by School Business Manager Ivan Klimko, the Oct. 9 issue of the Mariner reported the average miles a year for home/school transportation is between 3,000 and 5,000 year. After speaking with Transportation Coordinator Peggy Litchfield, Klimko said his estimate had been a little lower than the actual mileage, which is about 13,500 miles per bus for a 180-day school year, not including field trips or renting out the buses for other events. The average bus travels 70-75 miles a day.

Town boards meet on school utilities

Town Manager Mark Haddad met with Supt. Edward Malvey, School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, and Advisory Committee Chairman Susan Kent, to discuss what should be done to help the schools overcome the budget deficit caused by high utilities bills last winter.

"Last winter was a worst case scenario," said Haddad, and the total deficit is roughly $229,000.

Haddad said the town will try to deal with some of the deficit now, although it is still not clear where that money will come from, and tackle the rest in the spring. He said while tapping free cash is a possibility, he would like to keep around $400,000 in free cash, to help offset next year's budget.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall this week:

Advisory Committee, Oct. 23, 7 p.m.

Conservation Commission, Oct. 30, 7:30 p.m.

Paul Pratt Library Trustees, Nov. 12, 7 p.m., at the library.

Selectmen, Oct. 28, 7:30 p.m.

Sewer Commission, Oct. 29, 6 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Oct. 23, 7:30 p.m.

If Avalon goes ahead, ZBA wants light at Sohier Street

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The intersection is likely to become more problematic when the nearby Cook Estate off Sohier Street is developed.

If Avalon is built, the Zoning Board of Appeals wants a light at Sohier Street that would allow pedestrians from the 200-unit apartment complex to cross Route 3A safely.

But the ZBA has decided it cannot make the light a "project-breaker" because the ultimate decision whether to install the traffic signal is up to the Massachusetts Highway Department and not the town.

Therefore, the board doesn't think conditioning the project on the light would pass muster with the state Housing Appeals Committee — the state board that would hear an Avalon appeal should the project fail to receive a comprehensive permit.

So the ZBA hopes selectmen will solicit the help of town's legislators — state Rep. Garrett Bradley and state Sen. Robert Hedlund, who, along with the town and Avalon — would lobby for lights at what is now a tricky intersection.

"We have to put all the guns together," ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick said.

The ZBA also pointed out the intersection is likely to become more problematic when the nearby Cook Estate off Sohier Street is developed into about 84 units of senior housing.

Whether MassHighway would agree to installing a traffic signal is unclear. It is currently balking at the town's request to have a light at Cohasset's Greenbush train station on 3A (at the former Graham Waste company site).

According Chittick, MassHighway doesn't like to install traffic signals because they impede the flow of traffic along the state highway.

It is also not clear if the light at Stop & Shop is too close to the Sohier Street intersection. If a light was installed, it should be coordinated with the Stop & Shop light, the ZBA's engineering consultant said.

The ZBA is planning on taking a hard line with Avalon over sidewalks. The board would like Avalon to pay for installation of sidewalks along Rte. 3A from the entrance of the complex down to Stop & Shop; and from Stop & Shop along 3A to the strip mall where Good Sport is located. The board is also seeking a sidewalk up the Sohier Street hill where it would eventually connect to the existing sidewalk.

Avalon is seeking a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, that allows a project to skirt most of the town's zoning regulations – such as housing density – in exchange for providing some affordable housing.

The ZBA is expected to make its decision whether to issue the comprehensive permit with conditions within the next two weeks.

If MassHighway refuses to install a light, the ZBA briefly considered a pedestrian bridge but decided that would not be feasible.

ZBA member Barbara Power stressed the light was really important to integrate the complex to Cohasset.

"I'd hate to see those folks in splendid isolation," she said.

CPC votes 'no' on Cook Estate project study

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Members of the Community Preservation Committee aren't convinced the proposed Cook Estate project will move forward successfully, and have decided not to pay for due diligence on the property as requested by the Town Manager.

In a vote of six to one, with Tom Callahan abstaining, members denied the request for $20,000, which would be used for a survey, a Chapter 21E assessment, and soil evaluation, to determine whether a wastewater system could be constructed on site.

"Spending $20,000 for due diligence is probably a no brainer, but there is a chance we won't get it back if no developers come forward," said Al Moore, who is also Planning Board Chairman. "I have a very sick feeling about this project."

The Cook Estate project — being proposed by Selectmen — would be located off Sohier Street and include no more than 95 units of mixed income housing, consisting of apartments and cluster houses, with a portion of rental units being affordable for low-, moderate-, and medium-income seniors. The town will impose design controls and buffer requirements to protect adjacent properties.

Moore went on to say, he doesn't feel like the town should have to pay money on a public project when there are private developers who could be going through this process.

"Why are we putting the town's money at risk?" he asked.

Tom Callahan, who also sits on the Board of Selectmen, pointed out "[The money] will be asked to come out of somewhere," and the process will continue to move forward regardless. Because the project has been set up to specifically allow for a simultaneous closing between the town, the developers, and the Cook's, the process is meant to cost nothing to the town.

However, during the discussion, it was brought to the attention of the CPC that due diligence has already begun, as the request states, "This specific request is for $20,000 from the Community Preservation Fund to pay for the due diligence the Town is required to perform prior to Town Meeting....we have solicited quotes for this work from three engineering firms and have hired John Cavanaro Consultants to conduct the site survey and soil evaluation and Coler and Colantonio to perform the Chapter 21E Site Assessment."

The close reading of the request by Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road, brought even more questions to the table, when she asked how the town could already have begun the process of due diligence before voters have had the chance to vote on the purchase of the property at town meeting.

"That's an interesting conundrum," Ivimey said.

While CPC members weren't sure the process had actually begun just yet, the wording suggested at least a consultant had been hired, to which the question of whether the board even has the jurisdiction to fund a project which has already begun is feasible. Under CPC regulations, it is not allowed to fund pre-existing debt. In addition, the members began wondering if CPC money was being treated as a "slush fund," and member Jim Dedes said "I don't like the idea of being used like this."

However, in an interview after the meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he had no choice but to go ahead with the process of due diligence.

"How can I feel confident in recommending the purchase of a parcel of land to the town, that I haven't done a due diligence on?" he said. Haddad also said his original intention for getting the money to cover this process was to borrow out of free cash until the closing, when it would be put back again. But, at a meeting of the Board of Selectmen, it was suggested to him to ask the CPC to help with the funds. He said it is no problem if the CPC doesn't choose to fund this part of the project, and the money will be taken out of free cash.

Money for the Community Preservation Fund is derived from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax and some level of state match. Allocations are recommended by the committee and then voted on by Town Meeting. The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historical preservation, and affordable housing. The CPC can use a small percentage of its budget as earnest money for administrative tasks, such as appraisals. The town adopted the Community Preservation Act at Town Meeting two years ago.

nel issues interferes with the efficient operation of town services."

Haddad said all shifts would be filled during the officers' absence. Minimum manning requires three-men per shift, so overtime will be used.

"The selectmen and I are confident the police department will continue to provide very high quality service and adequate public safety protection," he said.

Haddad did say his action was not related to one specific incident but to "ongoing issues," and explained no public hearing is required because the officers were not being suspended or fired.

He could not provide a timeframe of how long the officers would be out, but did say he hoped the matter would be resolved in a positive manner.

Jackson declined to comment, referring questions to Haddad.

Quigley, who is commander of the 4 p.m.-midnight shift, is a highly visible officer involved in making many arrests. He received a recent commendation from the chief on his efforts to establish the first-ever student police academy in town which tries to improve relations between teens and police officers.

Also on Monday, Haddad fired part-time Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy. He said there were too many complaints because Murphy was not responsive to calls. Haddad said he is in the process of hiring a replacement.

In an unrelated matter, Officer Brian Curran resigned from the police department about a month ago.

good return on its asset: water.

The Water Commission will attend the selectmen's meeting Tuesday to brief them before Town Manager Mark Haddad signs the agreements.

Because the deal involves moving water from one watershed to another, state regulatory agencies are also weighing in on the three-way agreement with the Water Department, Erickson and Aquarion, a private company that serves Hingham.

State scrutiny will turn out to be a good thing for the alewife and herring that populate Bound Brook, which is fed by the reservoir, because the control structures will be improved providing better spawning opportunities for the fish, Kasameyer explained.

To get the water to Erickson, Cohasset would physically attach to a Hingham main off Rte. 3A and the water would be "wheeled" through Hingham. In other words, adding Cohasset water at this end into the Aquarion system would provide enough Hingham water at the other end to supply Erickson. A pump station would be constructed on town property near Woodside Cemetery and meters would be installed there and at Erickson to correlate and monitor the flow.

Erickson would pay for the 12-inch main 4,400 feet up Rte. 3A that would tie into the pipe near the Hingham standpipe at Cohasset Knoll. The company is also picking up the legal fees and engineering costs.

The Water Department could also connect Cohasset businesses to the new water main that would improve fire flow along the state highway.

Kasameyer said Cohasset has a safe yield of 3-1/2 million gallons on average per day without hurting the resource and is only using about 710,000 gallons per day on average.

He said Erickson would use the water for household purposes, so it is easier to plan the usage need. Erickson will use non-potable water for landscaping.

A 1998 Town Meeting vote set the stage for special legislation allowing the Water Department to sell town water.

Ceremony to celebrate 'new' Deer Hill School

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Tomorrow students, staff, and guests will crowd into the new Deer Hill auditorium for what is sure to be a memorable occasion for all who attend. Now that construction is complete, the newly renovated building will be rededicated in a celebration for the entire community.

The ceremony will begin at 1 p.m. with a slide show, including pictures from 1955 up through the renovations. The sixth-grade band will perform, as well as the fourth-grade chorus. Deer Hill Principal Keith Gauley said Rep. Garrett J. Bradley and Sen. Robert L. Hedlund will also attend the celebration, and he is still waiting to hear from Congressman William Delahunt. However, even if Delahunt cannot attend, a representative will be sent in his place to present a flag to the school which was flown over the U.S. Capitol.

The PSO will also present a gift for the school to mark the occasion, and Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, and School Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford will say a few words. Supt. Edward Malvey has also been asked to speak at the ceremony, but may have to serve jury duty that day.

But perhaps the highlight of the day, at least for the children, will be the refreshments served.

"We're getting sheet cakes made up for 400 kids," Gauley said, adding refreshments will be a little more sophisticated for the adults in attendance.

But the celebration doesn't end there, on Saturday, Oct. 25, from 9 a.m. to noon, the school will hold an open house, to give everyone in the community a chance to tour the new facilities at Deer Hill. Members of the PSO as well as the Deer Hill student council will be on hand to give guided tours.

"It's a great opportunity for people to get in there and see the building."
— Rob Spofford, School Building Committee

"It's a great opportunity for people to get in there and see the building," Spofford said.

Deer Hill's renovations were part of a $52 million project to update the town's schools, which began with the building of the new Osgood School, to the tune of $10 million. Deer Hill and the middle-high school have been undergoing construction at the same time, at a cost of $10 million for Deer Hill and $32 million for the middle high school.

"We're glad to get one of them off our plate," said Project Manager Simon Tempest. The middle-high school is slated to be completed this December.

Spofford said the school construction projects are probably the largest projects ever completed by the town, and he is proud to say construction progressed smoothly, was completed on budget, and on time. He said in a time when many towns are making news because of their need to close their schools either due to problems with construction, or health hazards such as mold infestation, "It's nice not to be on the front page."

RAD steel worker John Donovan guides the main beam into place on the new addition at the Deer Hill School back in August, 2001.

At the outset of the Deer Hill project, it was clear to see the building was outdated and in need of a major renovation.

"It looked like a 1950s school," Spofford said, adding a total overhaul of everything from the electrical components to paint, to new tiles had to be done.

But now, Spofford can't wait for the community to get inside and see what an amazing transformation took place, and how welcoming the new building feels.

"I think it looks very good," Tempest said, adding the new building is a first class facility and he couldn't be happier with the way the project turned out. While there were some minor "punch-list" items like exterior trim still to be completed, at the beginning of the week, materials have arrived from Canada, and everything will be complete for Friday's ceremony.

"It should be quite a combination of celebration," Gauley said, and the whole school is looking forward to it.

Malvey to retire after school year came back with the superintendent from Hull," Flynn said, adding it doesn't make much sense to pay someone a large sum of money to conduct a national search to come up with a candidate from the next town over.

Flynn said because Massachusetts has such strict requirements for education, it might make the most sense to conduct a more local search, in order to be able to hire someone who has extensive experience working in the state.

He said the current School Committee is familiar with the process of hiring a new superintendent, because three of the incumbents were on the board when Malvey was hired. Rick Shea served as Chairman in 1998, alongside members Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin.

When Malvey applied six years ago, the position was advertised at a salary range of $90,000 to $105,000 a year. Malvey made roughly $123,000 during the 2002 calendar year, according to the Town Report. It is still too early to say what the salary range would be for someone applying to fill his position.

Malvey said it is with "mixed feelings" that he announce his retirement, but feels the time has come to move on. In some ways, he said he would have loved to have begun his career in Cohasset, but was glad to have the chance to participate in such a great school system all the same. "It's been one heck of a ride," he said

Flynn and the committee offered their thanks to Malvey and wished him all the best.

"The time I've spent with you has been fantastic," Flynn said, adding he is amazed with the amount of work Malvey has been able to accomplish. "Thank you for all your service."

Malvey was hired from a field of 42 applicants in large part due to his extensive experience working with schools undergoing construction. He had the most experience in school building management out of all the finalists, which ultimately tipped the scales in his favor. In Cohasset, Malvey has overseen the completion of the $42 million middle-high school and Deer Hill expansion-renovation projects.

Malvey has been working in education since 1970, and spent the first 18 years of his career as a classroom teacher and assistant principal. He served as an assistant superintendent for 10 years, including Mansfield from 1989-1992, before becoming a superintendent. While most of his educational career was spent in Massachusetts, Malvey served as superintendent of schools in Griswold, Conn. before joining the school administration in Cohasset.

Olympic Citgo owner George Roukounakis wants to install a fence along his property boundary depicted by the painted white line.

Gas station gets OK for fence along property line

Would further restrict roadway

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Zoning Board of Appeals has agreed with Olympic Citgo gas station owner George Roukounakis that he should be able to install a fence along his property line.

But the problem is, Roukounakis' property line is actually inside the paved area of James Lane, the narrow driveway that runs between his gas station at 55 S. Main St. and the Red Lion Inn.

"I think Mr. Roukounakis has the right to install his fence but regret that it may affect public safety," ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick said Monday during the board's deliberations on the issue.

But the town can buy it, take it by eminent domain, lease it or make James Lane one way, he said.

"I think Mr. Roukounakis has the right to use his property."

Roukounakis said when the Red Lion Inn was rebuilt no one listened to him about safety issues along the tiny roadway and how it was too narrow for trucks.

The roadway is only about 16-1/2 feet wide now and it gets a lot of traffic from limousines and delivery trucks to the Red Lion Inn. Roukounakis' existing fence is constantly being knocked down by vehicles that don't have room to turn around, he said.

The issue was before the ZBA because Building Inspector Bob Egan denied issuing a building permit for the fence for safety reasons.

According to plans presented by Roukounakis and his attorney, Robert W. Galvin, about four feet of the paved area of James Lane along the gas station side actually belongs to Roukounakis, who has offered to lease the area to the Red Lion Inn or to the town to no avail. Although the part of James Lane belonging to Roukounakis has been used as part of the roadway for years, the land cannot be subject to adverse possession because it is registered, Galvin explained.

While the gas station will remain, Roukounakis eventually wants to develop the part of his property near James Lane.

The fire department has cautioned that James Lane is the only route in terms of public safety and access for fire trucks to access the Red Lion Inn.

But the ZBA said the safety aspect wasn't its issue and the town has options such as a one-way travel plan that it could pursue.

Chittick said Monday he expected the board hadn't heard the last of the issue.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was going to see if selectmen can appeal the decision.

"It's a bad decision by the Board of Appeals," he said. "They failed to see the big picture. Public safety should have been taken into consideration before allowing the fence.

"This is pitting the selectmen, fire and police departments against the Board of Appeals."

Eastwood film has Cohasset connection

the film – but screen-time wise is insignificant, says Norris. He notes there were 20 bars within a block that could have been used for the set, but with a production designer the caliber of Bumstead, Eastwood opted to create a new one.

Norris said Eastwood works with the same crew on all his films. A big difference with Eastwood at the helm is no yelling is allowed. Before filming a scene, a few hands go up in the air and there's silence.

"Usually there is a lot of yelling and horns to get people to quiet down," he explains. "Eastwood commands so much respect he doesn't have to go through that."

Norris said Robbins was more approachable than Penn, who was "in his own world" preparing for the intense scene. Norris did not meet Bacon, who was not in the bar scene.

In the scene real booze was initially used in the glasses but when the two actors playing the Savage brothers announced they'd been sober for years – the alcohol was substituted with ice tea.

Robbins quipped he'd been sober for "38 hours," Norris recalled.

"We almost had an AA crisis," he said.

After reading for two other small parts in the film, CP Casting Inc. in Boston called Norris for the bartending role. He was involved in three takes and about half-day of shooting.

"I was glad to meet Clint Eastwood in person," says Norris, adding Eastwood did not have that "I am a star attitude."

He said they chatted about Eastwood's 1970s movie "Play Misty For Me," where he played a radio personality.

"He's a pretty cool guy," Norris says.

Norris, who is married and the father of three, writes and does voice work for Charles Laquidara's morning radio show on WZLX 100.7 in Boston.

His other movie roles include playing a Red Sox fan in "With Honors" (1994) starring Joe Pesci and Brendan Fraser, and playing a bartender in "The Mouse" (1997). Norris shattered his knee cap during the bar scene in "The Mouse." Norris was also an extra in "Glory" (1989) with Denzel Washington and Matthew Broderick. He's also performed in a slew of commercials, some music videos and a cop TV drama "Against the Law." Norris is a 1980 graduate of Cohasset High School.

Bates Wilder

Norris isn't the only local connection to Mystic River. Bates Wilder of Scituate plays the "loud-mouth cop" in the scene with Bacon and Laurence Fishburne where Penn first learns about his daughter's murder.

In a scene from Mystic River, Sean Penn is restrained by State Troopers after learning his daughter has been murdered.

Expert with an eye for Asian art

ual attention for each item they bring. There will also be a Roadshow party Saturday night from 6-8 p.m., where wine and hearty hors d'oeuvres will be served, and guests will have a chance to play "What's It Worth," with the appraisers.

"I don't think there's been an appraisal day in this area for a while," Rabstenek said, and hopes many will come out for the event, not only to find out more about the items they bring in, but to help support a good cause.

Most of the appraisers who will travel to Cohasset have participated in the Roadshow at some point in their careers, and all have a large breadth of knowledge about the items they appraise. For Rabstenek, who spent years in the auction business before becoming an independent dealer, being able to help clients to the best of her ability means constantly doing research on different kinds of Asian art. She said she mainly deals with Chinese and Japanese works, which requires much study because the history has not been very well documented.

"It's forever challenging," she said.

But studying art is nothing new to Rabstenek, who earned her bachelor's degree in art history from Mount Holyoke College. While she said becoming interested in antiques was never something she would have imagined would lead to a career, "It just kind of stuck," and she's been at it ever since.

After she received her degree, Rabstenek moved to London and became involved with an educational art program at Sotheby's, one of the most well known auction houses. Even then, she didn't pay much attention to the auction aspect of her surroundings, and it wasn't until after she had earned her master's degree in Ireland and then returned home that she began her career at auction houses, starting with Skinner Auction House, which has locations in Boston and Bolton.

"That's where I first learned about the auction business," she said, adding from there she moved on to Philips and then Christie's, which are both located in New York.

While at Skinner, Rabstenek picked up a second specialty and now appraises silver, which she said is much easier than art because silver is mostly judged by its weight, although factors such as the maker or its having an intricate pattern does affect the value of a piece.

"There are great reference books for silver, which helps," she said, adding sometimes older, faux silver can be difficult to distinguish from the real pieces.

But even thought Rabstenek's first and foremost interest has always been Asian art, it is a hobby she said she leaves at the office.

"Specialists don't tend to collect what they work with," she said, adding her personal collection has more19th century American Landscape paintings.

Currently, Rabstenek works for herself, buying and selling works of art, doing appraisals for museums, attorneys, and private clients , and working on occasion for the Roadshow, of which she has been a part since the beginning.

"I did the very first one seven years ago," she said.

Rabstenek said she is looking forward to the appraisal show in Cohasset and can't wait to see what residents will bring. Because she has been involved with the Roadshow for so long, she has become very familiar with the process of appraising and said she's "seen enough to be able to take a look at a piece and say, 'that's nice, that's something special.'"

If an item is too large to bring to the show, or too fragile to risk the trip, detailed pictures can be brought to the show. If the piece looks promising, appraisers can take a trip out to the house or even help with a sale of the item if the owner chooses, she said.

While many items brought to the show won't be enough to retire on, for many, just knowing what they have and being able to identify it is worth the trip. However, Rabstenek said many people do know what they have and are interested in receiving a more updated appraisal.

"Value does fluctuate in our business," she said.

In the instance an appraiser isn't sure what an item is, she said there is always a way to find out and they will be happy to get back to clients with that information.

"You just never know what you might have and people like us can help you figure it out."

More fundraising in playground's future

CPC gives request a frosty reception

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Members of Project Playground may need to push back their goal of having a new playground installed behind the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum this spring, to allow for more time for fundraising.

Suzanne Childress Trnka, Logan Bernstein, and Muffy Antico, have been working hard on their fundraising campaign, in the hopes that their dream of having a new playground in town, where families can enjoy spending time together outdoors, can become a reality. Looking for funding to add to their efforts, they turned to the Community Preservation Committee in the hopes they would receive $60,000 toward the total estimated cost of $130,000 for the playground. After much debate and discussion, the women were ultimately turned down.

Although the members of Project Playground do not work for the museum, their intention is to build on the parcel of land behind the museum, to provide a recreational area with not only the play structures, but picnic benches, which will be located next to the town basketball courts. The project is tied to the museum through its lease, which says the museum is responsible for providing a playground on the premises.

Members of the CPC said they weren't sure giving $60,000 "carte blanche" for a playground was something the board would be comfortable with, and the idea of giving between $20,000 and $30,000 to the cause was discussed, ultimately, it seems wording in the lease made the decision easier to make.

"If the town pays any portion of this, it modifies the lease," said member Tom Callahan, who also sits on the Board of Selectmen. He said he believed the agreement with the museum and the town was that the museum would be responsible for installing a play structure on site, at their own expense, and could not ask the town for any help.

The actual lease between the town and the museum reads, "Tenant shall, at tenant's sole cost and expense, complete the following work on the leased premises in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5, above," and under number 12 of the list of work to be completed states, "Complete landscaping and provide and install equipment for outside play area adjacent to building."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he disagrees with the CPC's interpretation, and believes as long as Project Playground doesn't come back to the Board of Selectmen looking for funds, there is nothing to prohibit the group from looking elsewhere in town. While he acknowledges he is not a lawyer, he believes Project Playground has "every right to ask," and the CPC has every right to deny the money. However, he does not agree the grounds for denial can be a breach of the lease.

Other concerns the CPC has regarding the project is whether the Our World Museum in financially sound. Callahan said he has heard rumors that the museum is not doing as well on its fund-raising campaign as it had expected, and he wonders what the fate of the museum will be.

Chairman Stuart Ivimey said in the worst case scenario, if the museum files for bankruptcy, the money set aside for the playground, although in a separate account, is still under the Our World name, and would be gone. He's not sure that's a risk the CPC is willing to take, especially for such a large sum of money.

However, Our World board member Molly Pierson said in a telephone interview, "No, we're not in trouble."

"I suppose fund raising doesn't ever go as quickly as planned," she said, but added the project of remodeling the building has gone smoothly, and is almost complete, and they are optimistic about the second phase of building the playground outside. She said if it takes a little longer to raise the funds for projects, the museum will have to deal with that, but "we're not worried at all at this point."

But, in the event the museum did experience trouble, "The playground could help get the museum up and running," said Trnka. However, she added if separation of the land from the museum is the only way to make the playground happen, "we're certainly willing to take that into consideration."

Callahan suggested Selectmen become involved, and have a meeting with members from the Our World board, to discuss possibly renegotiating the lease to return the parcel of land behind the museum back to the town, and generally clear up matters discussed at the meeting of the CPC. If the land was returned to the town, no matter what the outcome of the museum is, the town could count on always having a playground.

However, when all is said and done, the CPC will make the decision on the funding and the outcome might not be favorable. Ivimey said while he doesn't mean to be derogatory in any way, "Generally speaking, there are more important projects that come before this board."

But with or without funding from the CPC, members of Project Playground say they will continue on in their efforts and while it might take longer, they will come up with the funds to build.

"We'll just keep at it. Our goal is to have a town playground," Antico said.

School board pushes for charter school moratorium

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When representatives from the Cohasset School Committee attend this year's annual joint conference between the Massachusetts Association of School Committees and Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents, a representative from Cohasset could vote on behalf of the town in favor of a moratorium on the opening and approval of new charter schools.

Each year during the three-day conference, the MASC Delegate Assembly is held, and resolutions to the MASC bylaws are considered, with legislation often filed as a result. This year, the conference will take place on Nov. 12-14 at the Worcester Centrum, with the Delegate Assembly scheduled for Wednesday the 12th. Committee member Pat Martin said she would be available to serve as Cohasset's representative that day, and cast a vote on the resolution, on the town's behalf.

"Because Cohasset had the very recent situation of the South Shore Maritime Academy Charter School putting forth its credentials to the Department of Education, it kind of brought it home to us," said Supt. Edward Malvey.

The DOE denied the proposal for the SSMACS, which means it will not go forward in the process to acquire a charter. However, when a charter is denied, there is still the option to apply again the following year, which the school's founders may opt to do. There is always the other possibility that another separate group could become interested in Cohasset as a location for a different charter school, which the School Committee doesn't want to see happen.

Towns are held financially accountable for the public schooling of its children, which includes footing the bill for those children who opt to attend charter schools. In Cohasset, tuition ranges from between $7,000 and $8,000 per student, not including what the town must pay for transportation for those students.

The resolution "expresses a true concern on the part of many school departments," said Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts, who would like to see the moratorium in effect until some of the pressing issues can be ironed out.

The resolution states:

The Massachusetts Association of School Committees calls upon the legislature to impose immediately a moratorium on the opening and approval of new charter schools until such time as:

A fair reimbursement system is put into place to compensate districts in full for the diversion of Chapter 70 (Massachusetts General Laws) State Aid to Education.

An investigation is conducted to determine whether students nominally enrolled in individual charter schools are actually enrolled, and for what periods of time.

Reputable research is completed to study the level of and effectiveness of innovative learning strategies consistent with the charters of the approved schools.

Credible research has been conducted to assess student learning and achievement levels to measure progress of comparable student cohorts in charter and non-charter public schools.

A fair analysis has been completed to identify the level of enrollment of and services provided to students with special educational needs as defined by the federal Individuals with Disabilities in Education Act, or who are not proficient in the English language, or who represent racial discrete minorities, or who represent economically disadvantaged populations.

The School Committee will continue in its discussion on the resolution until the date of the conference draws near. Tebbetts said she "would encourage everyone to be familiar with it and suggest that Cohasset sup-

Last brush day

Residential brush will be accepted at the D.P.W. parking area at 91 Cedar St. on Saturday, Oct. 25, from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Due to the condition of the town's chipping machine the following items will not be accepted: stumps, firewood, vines, building wood, fences or any wood with nails. No trees over 3 inches diameter.

This is the last scheduled brush day this year.

Foreign objects clogging pumps

There are still cases of foreign objects clogging sewer pumps, and this is to remind customers that only normal toilet and garbage disposer waste should be discharged. As the sewer department previously advised its users, it is necessary to charge for the Town's $85 ($100 on weekends) cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary napkins, shells, towels.

Time to fall back

This weekend we turn the clocks back one hour to standard time, correcting for daylight savings time in the spring. The end result is that it will be dark by late afternoon as youngsters come home from school and commuters head home for the evening. Suppertime will be enjoyed in the dwindling light and families will be starting up the fireplace this weekend.

The good thing about turning the clocks back is that we gain an hour of sleep this weekend. As November approaches and the weather turns noticeably cooler, the body's internal clock gets reset, as well. People naturally want to carbo-load on stews and comfort foods as the body decides it's time to go into hibernation. Didn't we just turn off the central heating in June? What happened to summer?

One interesting news item that's cropped up around a few South Shore communities this fall is the idea of turning off street lights to save money during a time of tight municipal budgets. Great — not only do we go into an extended period of darkness until the spring, but our streets are in danger of going dark, too. These really are tough times.

It's hard to imagine, but some communities were considering turning off one-third of their street lights. Fortunately, many towns are seeing that this way of saving money is penny wise and pound foolish. The thinking was that turning off street lights might save the jobs of town employees as the budget crisis drags on. Turns out, it costs more money to have the utility company turn off the street light than it costs for the towns to keep the lights on in the first place. Then, if the light were turned on again, the utility company would charge a sizable amount. The utility companies sure know how to work the angles.

As towns entertain the idea of going dark, there almost certainly comes the risk of an increase in crime. Some of our suburban streets are poorly lit anyway, and neighborhoods could become victims of vandalism, theft and even more serious incidents.

This is the time of year when people are out at night shopping for the upcoming holiday season. Youngsters are out on foot and on bicycles delivering newspapers. Halloween is coming. Good lighting is a basic necessity for safety. Soon there will be ice on the roads, not to mention potholes, and navigating streets in wintry darkness is not a good idea.

Another bit of cheery news for those who are still recovering from last winter. The Farmer's Almanac is predicting larger than usual snowfalls and cold temperatures across the northeast, especially in February.

"The big story in the Northeast is that February looks like it's going to be a never-ending series of storms that will be reminiscent of last year, when just about everybody was getting ready to head for the Caribbean," said Sandi Duncan, the almanac's managing editor.

Almanac prognosticators say some parts of New England will continue to receive snow into late April. The Almanac is also calling for a snowy winter in the Rockies. A mild winter weather is on tap for the southeast U.S.

Almanac prognosticators with the Farmer's Almanac base their predictions on a secret formula which is linked to sunspots and planetary positions.

Hawaii anyone?

Democrats plan for convention

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee kicks off the presidential campaign season with an invitation to all interested voters who wish to participate in the 2004 Democratic National Convention to be held in Boston this summer. Fred Koed, the featured speaker, will share his experiences as a vote counter in Palm Beach County, following the 2000 presidential election. The delegate selection process will be explained and volunteer opportunities will be described.

Agnes McCann, Town Committee chairman, expects an enthusiastic turn-out. "I have had many calls asking about the presidential campaigns, and how to become a delegate or a volunteer at the convention. This is an excellent way to meet other Cohasset democrats and learn how to become involved in the process." All interested voters are invited to join the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee on Monday, Oct. 27 at the Cohasset High School Library, 7 – 9 p.m. For information, call McCann (781) 383-0222.

Keep town-owned parcel as open space

TO THE EDITOR:

Regarding the potential purchase of the Cook Estate — it is not my "backyard," which has already been fully developed by the high school expansion — but the town-owned property abutting the Cook Estate that I would like to see left as green space.

Our selectmen and town manager have determined these approximately nine acres have no value and propose bundling them with the sale of the Cook property.

Oh, by the way, they're not giving us the opportunity to vote on whether we want to sell this property. There will be one article on the warrant asking for approval to purchase the Cook Estate and sell both the Cook Estate and our land to a developer. Perhaps we want to keep our land and just sell the Cook Estate. As it stands right now we don't have that option. Maybe you will agree with me. Maybe you won't. Either way, this decision should be made by general vote, not decided by six people.

Here's my case: the town property you and I as taxpayers already own is environmentally sensitive, about half of it is wetlands. A pie-shaped wedge on one corner is in Zone A of our watershed. An uncertified vernal pool is located on it. There are several areas designated as endangered natural habitat.

In a letter from the Board of Selectmen to the Cook Estate in October 2002, Michael Sullivan wrote: "There is a one-time-only opportunity to permanently connect the Cook property to Town and conservation lands to help expand a dwindling network of open space and wildlife habitat that links Cohasset Village to Wompatuck State Park." Not developing the nine acres will do this.

Don't care? Think we have enough open space already? Here's a another reason we all should care about this particular parcel — it lies within our watershed and upland from Peppermint Brook, one of the main tributaries to Lily Pond, the source of our drinking water. The Water Commission and the Board of Health are concerned.

No matter how good the technology, the fact of the matter is septic systems fail. It would be unfair to provide sewer capacity to this or any development while homes in town remain unsewered. The Board of Health's suggestion to investigate new alternative technology was scoffed at. John McNabb was right when he said the best protection is no development.

Our Water Commission has determined the major pollutant to Lily Pond is Peppermint Brook which runs through a densely developed area. The commission has earmarked other properties in this neighborhood for purchase in order to prevent further pollution of Lily Pond. We will be asked to approve expenditure of our tax dollars for this purpose. I wholeheartedly agree with the Water Commission and hope you do too.

So one town body is seeking to spend our tax dollars to purchase land and another is seeking to sell our land — all in the same area. This makes no sense to me. How about you?

While I'm at it, no, I am not anti-senior housing. My Mother lived at 60 Elm St. I am an enthusiastic advocate for affordable senior housing. It's important to the overall character of our community to keep our seniors in town. The goal should be to keep as broad a social and economic mix of seniors as possible. I question whether this development as presently proposed will do that. To paraphrase Peter Pratt, affordability is the key.

Smart development of the Cook Estate using new urbanism architecture and new wastewater technology will provide the senior housing everyone says we need and our seniors deserve. Not developing our nine acres will provide added protection to our water supply. This scenario is a win-win proposition.

The reason put forth for the town's involvement in the purchase and sale of the Cook Estate is to control the amount and type of development. This is a good thing. However, as presently worded, the RFP that will be given to developers for bidding, merely suggests rather than definitively states what the town is looking for in this development. Providing clear specifications and parameters does not stifle creativity. It encourages it and ensures our goals are met.

Cohasset is everyone's backyard. Please care. Attend or watch the selectmen's meetings. Call or write to let them know your concerns. And come to Town Meeting. Thank you.

Composting toilets, a pollution solution

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

We all live under the specter of Title 5 or paying for the sewer to get rid of out wastewater. We have some citizens living with old septic systems who can't afford to upgrade to either sewers or a repaired septic system.

Wouldn't it be wonderful if we had a better septic solution and less pollution?

You may have heard of a system called "composting toilets". Composting toilets are units within a building which uses very little or no water for flushing. The residue from use is dropped into a secure water and fume-tight holding container where, in time, the waste byproducts undergo a composting action consisting of oxidation and decomposition into pathogen -free garden mulch. The difference between this material and that coming from a large scale sewer plant such as Deer Island is that since no water has been used in the processing, there are no metals or other dangerous substances in the residue.

Because of incompletely developed early systems, the units have gotten a bad name for giving off odors. But as a result of constant development and the use of many millions of these systems all over the world they have become considerably safer and more sanitary than conventional systems.

Composting toilet systems are approved for general use by the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection as of March 31, 1995, and regulations are now being prepared for their use in new construction. When one considers that composting toilet installations range in price from $1,000 to $10,000, well below septic systems or sewer betterment costs, it was imperative that the Board investigate how they could be made to meet our Town's needs.

Some of the local Health Boards which have granted composting toilet approvals include: Rowley, Ipswich, West Newbury, Boxford, Middleton, Salem, Lynnfield, North Reading, Sherborn, Acton, Harvard, Littleton, Holliston, Norfolk, Cohasset, Watertown, Otis, Mt. Washington, Falmouth, Bourne, Mashpee, Eastham, Harwich, Wellfleet, Orleans, Dennis, Chatham, Centerville, Chilmark, Gay Head, Oak Bluffs, and Edgartown.

With the installation of some composting toilets, DEP allows homeowners a 40 percent reduction in the septic system design for greywater. Greywater, the residue from washing machines, baths and showers, etc., requires substantially reduced treatment and requires less land, saves water, eliminates pollution, and may be considerably less expensive than traditional Title 5 disposal methods for many of Cohasset's difficult sites.

We are investigating the use of composting toilets for applications wherever they appear to be appropriate, and since they have substantially less effect on the environment than either sewers or conventional septic systems, we hope to promote their regular use in home construction.

Here is a picture of a modern composting toilet. There, now, can you really tell the difference?

Project SAFEGUARD event for seventh graders and parents

On Monday, Oct. 27 seventh-grade students at Cohasset Middle School will be participating in a special half-day, off-campus program known as Project SAFEGUARD. Parents of seventh-graders are invited and encouraged to attend with their children. Other community members are welcome to attend as well. In past years, parents have found this to be a very valuable experience, and one that facilitates helpful discussions at home.

A lively and engaging half-day seminar is planned that incorporates drama, film, speakers and group discussions designed to supplement school health education and guidance programs. In addition, there will be segments for parents only, offering advice and opportunities for discussion on "surviving the teenage years" and other useful topics. The Project SAFEGUARD Committee, comprised of educators, clergy, community reps and parents, believes that the cooperation of the entire community as well as an intimate parent-school partnership is necessary to help protect young people from risky behaviors. The goal of the program is to go beyond educating the students by providing parents and families with support and guidance, as well as strategies for raising healthy and resilient children. The program is subsidized by the PSO (Parent-School Organization) as well as church and civic donations, making it a true community effort.

This year's featured speakers are Steve Wallace and Jack Agati. Wallace has broad experience as a psychologist and counselor. He has written and lectured widely on the subject of adolescent development. Presently he serves as chairman of the board and chief executive officer for the SADD National organization (Students Against Destructive Decisions). He will address both students and parents. Mr. Agati will present to parents his talk titled, "Six Steps to Surviving the Teenage Years." Parents will love his ideas. (We're not so sure the students will).

Students and parents will view and discuss "Jesse's Journal," a play that addresses a variety of middle school issues including family and peer relationships, appearance and behavior, dating, gender issues, substance use and abuse, and social and academic stress. Cohasset High School peer counselors will act out the play, and there will be opportunities for small group discussions and interaction among the students and adults.

The "Campus on the Common" event will begin promptly at 7:30am at the Cohasset Town Hall and will later move to St. Stephen's church up the hill. The program will conclude at 11:40 a.m. At that time students will be served lunch (provided) and parents will be invited to attend a luncheon in the St. Stephen's church hall.

Students will be bused to the site in the morning and back to school following lunch. Students who walk to school may choose to get dropped off at the Town Hall or at the school to be transported with classmates.

For more information, contact Dr. Michael Gill, Health Education Coordinator 781-383-4205 (mikegill@cohassetk12.org), PSO rep Sally Sisson Game (781-383-6190) or community liaison Rev. Cliff Cutler (781-383-1083).

Down with the Evil Empire

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Hi there, Red Sox Nation. Still feel that Our Olde Town Team let us down against Them Damn Yankees once again? Before you take off your shoes and line up to jump off the Fore River Bridge, listen to this.

Believe it or not, the Red Sox have had successes against the Yankees. There have been instances when there has been dancing in Tremont Street following games with the Evil Empire. Of course, it took a while to find them but here they are:

The season of 1904, the Yankees (then called the Highlanders) second in the American League, came down to the final series with Boston and New York neck and neck for the league championship.

The score was tied in the ninth inning with a Pilgrim (as the Sox were called then) on third and two out when Highlander pitcher Jack Chesbro (a 41-game winner that year) uncorked a wild pitch that sent the winning run across the plate.

Before you take off your shoes and line up to jump off the Fore River Bridge, listen to this.

The Pilgrims may have won the pennant but there was no World's Series in 1904 because that other New York team, the Giants, didn't want to risk the prestige of the National League by recognizing the upstart Americans.

The author John Cheever, a Sox fan, of course once said: "All literary men are Red Sox fans. To be a Yankees fan in literary society is to endanger your life."

Not only did the 1912 Red Sox win the pennant but they finished 55 games ahead of the eighth and last place Highlanders, who became the Yankees the following year. Boston won the season's series 19 to 2, still the worst ever for the New Yorkers.

A young pitcher named George Herman "Babe" Ruth hit the first home run of his career against the Yankees in New York's Polo Grounds on May 6, 1913, off a pitcher named Jack Warhop.

Sox rookie Billy Rohr had a no-hitter going with two out in the ninth inning in early April, 1967, when the Yank's Elston Howard broke it up with a single. Ironically, Howard ended up with the Sox when they won the '67 pennant.

The Red Sox embarked on a 12-game winning streak in July, 1939, with a five-game sweep of the reigning champion Yankees in Yankee Stadium, no less, leading New York manager Joe McCarthy to cry, "Just who the hell are supposed to be the world champions, us or the Red Sox?"

The series produced an oddity in 1959 when a pinch runner hit a grand slam home run. Gene Stephens ran for Ted Williams in the sixth inning. The Sox batted around and Gene had to bat for himself. He hit a grand slam. Boston won, 13 to 3.

"Go crack me open a beer. I'll only be a minute," Sox relief pitcher Dick Radatz told starter Earl Wilson one day. Then he proceeded to strike out Yankees Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris and Elston Howard on 10 pitches.

There, now. Feel better?

Mourning doves — songbirds or migratory game birds?

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

They make a mournful sound, as their name implies. They are frequent visitors to backyard feeders, picking up seeds from the ground. They consume huge quantities of weed seeds, which should make them a friend of farmers. They also make a tasty meal according to some people, although the edible breast meat only weighs about 2 ounces. Once known as "Turtle Doves of Carolina", they are now known as Mourning Doves. They are members of the Columbidae family. Columba is Latin for dove or pigeon, the two words being somewhat interchangeable. Within this family, Mourning Doves belong to the genus Zénaida, named by Charles L. Bonaparte, a French ornithologist, for his wife, Princess Zénaide Charlotte Julie Bonaparte. The species name macroura comes from the Greek and means long-tailed.

Mourning Dove tails are indeed long and pointed. The outer tail feathers have white tips that create a jagged white fringe during flight They push up from the ground with their strong short legs to become airborne. During takeoff the wings make a distinctive and very loud whistling noise. These doves are plump brown and gray birds with red feet, a bit of turquoise skin around the eyes, one black spot on the neck and several more on the wings. They move along the ground not by hopping, but by walking, bobbing their head as they go.

There are about 312 species of doves and pigeons worldwide and 14 species in North America. Four of these 14 were introduced, including the Rock Dove known simply as Common Pigeon by most people. Five others have occurred as "accidentals", and the Passenger Pigeon has become extinct. Mourning Doves breed in all the lower 48 United States plus parts of Canada and Mexico and show up upon occasion in Alaska.

People often mistake Mourning Doves for other birds, not because they are hard to identify, but because they can have an uncanny resemblance to other birds. Their melancholy call of "Oo-AH-cooo-coo-coo" can sound remarkably owl-like. In flight and sitting on telephone wires, the similarity in looks to small falcons can confuse even experienced birders. When hunkered down with their breasts flat on the ground to sunbathe, they may look like rocks or become too camouflaged to be noticed.

Two anatomical features are unique with doves and pigeons. They are the only birds that can drink without tilting their heads back. They suck up liquid as if through a straw. The dove and pigeon family also produces something known as "pigeon milk" to feed their newborn babies. Males actually produce more milk than females, who may be busy incubating the second brood while the male is still feeding the first set of fledglings. The milk is produced in the lining of the crop, an enlarged area of the esophagus, where seeds are temporarily stored and ground up. The thickened crop lining sheds cells containing a rich mammal-like formula of fat, protein, and Vitamins A and B to mix with seeds before being regurgitated into the throats of the young.

Breeding males have bluish crowns and napes and rose-colored breasts. Females are more uniformly brown or tan. Both parents take part in nest building, incubating eggs, and feeding the young. The nest is a remarkably flimsy collection of twigs that holds two eggs. The males usually incubate the eggs during the day while the females take the night duty. In spite of the insubstantial nest and the fact that eggs sometimes get laid even before the nest is finished, Mourning Doves manage to produce several broods a year, typically at least two or three, but there are reports of as many as six!

Mourning Doves are not long distance migrants, but some northern birds do migrate south. As of now, about three-quarters of the 50 United States allow hunting of Mourning Doves as migratory game birds. Michigan is currently debating whether to allow hunting of doves. In 1971 the state of Wisconsin adopted the Mourning Dove as their official symbol of peace, making it off limits to hunters. Then in 2000 the Wisconsin State Legislature changed the status back to "migratory game bird". Opponents challenged this law in court, and only this past August did the court rule that hunting would be allowed beginning September 1. Mourning Doves may not be hunted in Massachusetts.

Mourning Doves are a common bird in spite of the fact that hunters kill tens of millions each year in North America. Although there have been declines in some areas in recent years, it is not clear just how much negative impact there is from hunting Mourning Doves. For this reason a banding study began this past summer with 28 (so far) states participating. The hope is to band some 85,000 birds during the next three years. Anyone finding a dead bird with a band should report the number to the US Fish and Wildlife Service at 1-800-327-BAND. Hunters do this routinely when they kill ducks with bands on their legs. Anyone reporting a band number will receive a "Certificate of Appreciation" with information about when and where the bird was banded. The data gathered from these recoveries should help wildlife biologists understand migratory movements, population densities and harvest rates for Mourning Doves.

Will hunting send Mourning Doves down the road to extinction as happened to the Passenger Pigeon? Or can these birds that are notoriously difficult to hit be able to survive in spite of being hunted?

Joanne Norton is Master Bander for the New England Wildlife Center, and counts birds for Project FeederWatch and International Shorebird Surveys.

Document proves four-quad gates are safe technology

TO THE EDITOR:

I was disappointed that last week's article on four-quad gates did not cite the source of my information on appropriate grade crossing treatments. I gave the Journal a copy of the technical memorandum on grade crossings prepared for the State of Delaware by DMJM Harris a rail engineering consulting firm. The document gives complete support to our position that four-quad gates are fully proven, accepted by the Federal Rail Administration and the preferred treatment method. Eric Fleming, a DMJM Harris employee, is working as a consultant to the MBTA as Deputy Program Manager for the Greenbush line. Mr. Fleming is the individual who stands up at the public meetings and states that this is an unproven and experimental technology. The MBTA needs to explain why their recommendations go directly against the technical memo prepared by the consulting firm they have hired for this project. Does DMJM Harris stand behind the advice of their employee Eric Fleming? If so, what is their explanation for the inconsistent advice?

Yesterday, I received a phone call from the Illinois Commerce Commission. They had read about our situation and wanted to let us know that they have 70 four-quadrant gates in Illinois. They are extremely pleased with their performance and "would be happy to help Hingham convince the MBTA of their safety and necessity". The MBTA claims there are only 80 four-quad gates in the country. However, we know there are 70 in Illinois, and more in at least Connecticut, North Carolina, Florida, California, Georgia, and Vermont. Eighty seems like fuzzy math to me.

Stakes high on reforming affordable housing policy

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

One of the great lines of the Civil War went: "Lincoln would like to have God on his side, but he must have Kentucky."

Kevin Honan will settle for Marshfield.

Honan, the House chairman of the Housing and Urban Development Committee, has spoken to every single member of the House in the past few months, seeking a way to solve the enormously complicated political equation of successfully reforming the state's affordable housing policy. By no means are the stakes as high as they were in 1863, but for Massachusetts, in 2003, they're very, very high nonetheless.

The state's economic future depends on the cost of housing. If it's too high — and it already is — workers want to live elsewhere, which means businesses want to locate somewhere else. But if too many units are built too fast, the very quality of community that keeps living space so valuable here is eroded. Many politicians from the suburbs feel that's already happening, as developers take advantage of a law that cancels local control over new housing projects in communities that lack sufficient affordable housing. Honan and his Senate counterpart, Harriette Chandler of Worcester, are seeking ideal amendments to that law. They released their plan last week. Its three key provisions are a system of counting housing units that will take a number of communities off the list of places where local officials have no choice but to accept new "affordable" developments; new provisions to assist communities in planning growth; and a system of incentives to reward communities for adopting "smart growth" practices on their own.

The demands of the task are huge, as underscored by the history: everyone wants the affordable housing law reformed, and no bill to do so has ever succeeded. On one hand, the representatives want to slow the tide of development; 15,000 units are currently proposed statewide under the law. On the other hand, policy makers know the working class has seen the American Dream cancelled in the past 20 years in Massachusetts, where the average selling price for a home is nudging $400,000.

To address t

itics, the governor first convened a task force to study Chapter 40B — the chapter of the General Laws in question. Legislators then combined the recommendations of that group with the input they got from extensive travels around the state — building support and gaining cover for the coming effort to pass reform. The next, and ultimate, test of their skill will come when the bill hits the floor of the House, and that should happen within a month.

The unity on the housing question was an exception to an increasingly testy atmosphere between the legislative and executive sides, and a flap over road naming proved it.

• Romney seeks to calm waters over tunnel naming — The governor took heat after his press secretary said his desire to name the Big Dig I-93 stretch the Liberty Tunnel reflects strong gubernatorial feelings about the servicemen and women who've died in Iraq. The comment came in response to a Transportation Committee vote to name the I-93 stretch after the late US House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill. Romney wants O'Neill's name emplaced on the new underground section of I-90. Under the committee's bill, the I-90 section will be named Veterans Tunnel. After an outcry stemming from the fallen-veterans comment, Romney told reporters a compromise will be found in good faith: "This is not a make-it-or-break-it issue for me," he said.

• Glimmer-make that gleam-of hope beamed on economy — A group of economists meeting in Westborough gave their best estimate of performance in the coming months, and it was encouraging. The analysts and academicians said the high-tech sector looks poised to rebound, and an estimate was floated at a conference that the state will create 57,000 new jobs during an economic recovery expected to begin this quarter.

The ZBA is being mislead

TO THE EDITOR:

Unfortunately for many of us in Cohasset, this year-long process of reviewing and analyzing this Avalon project now comes down to this. The ZBA appears likely to approve a 200-unit project that and pedestrian impacts that have not been adequately addressed.

The project is simply too big. The fiscal and infrastructure impacts of a project this size (with two others in the wings) will be huge. As proposed, it will likely drain hundreds of thousands from our tax base annually (as much as $450K annually by some estimates). And that for a town will still be short of our 10 percent because we now have more than 2,800 housing units and only 276 technically 'affordable units'. Their counsel knows it and is not being upfront with them or the town. But this is not surprising given the inherent conflicts that the ZbA's attorney Bobrowski and its consultant Jacobs represent as staunch (usually state funded) 40B figures for the purposes of 40B projects. The land value is the lesser of the last arm's length transaction if it occurred within the past three years or an appraisal based upon underlying zoning and not with the 40B in place. Yet Avalon claims to be paying $6.5 million for property that is assessed at less than $3 million and was sold just a few years ago for less than $2 mil-

CHS lady booters secure second straight state tourney berth

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

The later in the season it gets, the more interesting a soccer game in Hull becomes.

As Cohasset head coach Deb Beal has said to her teams in years past, "Anything can happen on a windy day."

The wind, the cold, and the night sky were all working against the Skippers and Pirates on Thursday night. Cohasset made the most of it, however, and came away with a 2-0 victory.

The victory clinched a playoff spot for Cohasset. It improved their South Shore League record to 7-4-1, which puts them in a tie with Abington for the second best record in the league. The top two finishers in each league qualify for the state tournament.

As the visiting team, Cohasset opted to play with the wind at their backs in the second half. The gusts certainly played a factor throughout the game, as plenty of average kicks from one side of the field suddenly found themselves flying into the arms of the goalie at other end.

Led by goals from midfielders Jenn Buckley and Nicole Whitney, with an assist from Casey Anderson, the Skippers were able to earn the W.

Beal said she was pleased with her team's work ethic, especially considering that the girls had to sit during the junior varsity game.

"They did a great job in keeping the ball on the ground in those elements," the coach said. "The team really kept their composure out there."

The win assured Cohasset of their second straight trip to the state tournament. Last year's squad finished the regular season 10-6-1 before losing to Ashland in the playoffs.

On Saturday, the girls lost a hard-fought game to Scituate, 2-0. This was a rematch of the teams' season opener, which the Sailors also took 2-0.

Cohasset played extremely well in the loss. They got eight shots on net, and played a pretty even game in terms of ball control.

"We didn't get outplayed, just outscored," said Beal, who added that her team has been playing with great confidence in recent weeks.

The Skippers were forced to play a few people out of their normal positions due to injuries. Senior sweeper Holly Graham sat out due to a hematoma on her leg, which she played on in Hull. Junior forward Lindsay Kennedy was also out with a sprained ankle, suffered during the Hull game.

Junior Christine Lovallo, who has excelled for Cohasset as an outside defender, played sweeper in place of Graham. Whitney, meanwhile, dropped back into defense to replace Lovallo.

Beal assigned Whitney, one of the team's best athletes, to cover Scituate speedster Michelle Littke.

"Nicole slowed her down and did an awesome job, with no complaints," Beal said afterwards.

The coach also gave a lot of credit to junior defender Danielle Hajjar, who had the task of marking Kacey Weafer, the Sailors' best player. Beal said Weafer's goal came on "sheer second effort," and that Hajjar did an excellent job of covering her.

Cohasset is now 7-7-1 overall, with three games in five days to wrap up their season. The Skippers play Cape Cod Academy on Friday and

CHS gridders manhandle Mashpee to kick off homecoming in grand fashion

The Cohasset Skippers football squad reached the midpoint of the season with a perfect record with a 28-6 win on Friday night over South Shore League rival Mashpee before a large Homecoming Night crowd at Alumni field.

The relentless ground game, which accounted for all four Cohasset touchdowns, and the swarming and blitzing defense sent the Falcons back to the Cape a little less healthier than when they left. The win improved the Skippers to 5-0 overall, 2-0 in SSL play, while Mashpee fell to and 1-3-1 (0-1-1).

On the defensive side of the ball, the Skippers had a huge game from junior defensive end Kelvin Ferriera (2 sacks, 8 tackles, and another three or four crushing hits on the Mashpee QB Josh Little as he attempted to execute the option play).

Senior captain Tony Truglia, junior Matt Casey, and junior Ted Straughn accounted for 23 tackles to solidify their position as the best group of linebackers in the South Shore League.

With each additional game, the front four of Ferriera, junior Leo Clougherty, junior Matt Baroudi, and senior Rob Carpenter are increasing their presence in the opponents backfield, forcing ill advised pass attempts, as well as continuously limiting rushing efforts to little or no gain. Those passes that do get airborne are either knocked down or missing their mark as the defensive backfield to include juniors Joe Durkin, Crandon Leahy, senior Sean Connolly and senior captain Chris Bilodeau are all over would be receivers.

The defense, under the direction of assistant coach Bob Silvia, has now allowed only 31 points in five games.

Offensively, Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe had Mashpee's heads spinning all night.

It was pick your poison: run or pass? The Skippers rushed for 229 yards and four touchdowns, and through the air completed five passes for 80 yards, each completion a first down conversion.

After a Cohasset fumble on their its series, the visiting Falcons converted, as tailback Eric Fundstein broke several tackle attempts and scooted 64

Battle testing

CHS booters hope tough closing stretch will get them ready for postseason play

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

You can always tell the coaches who have serious postseason aspirations. They're the ones who willingly line up the monsters to fill out their non-league schedule at the end of the season.

Using that as a primary indicator, it seems a safe bet that rookie Cohasset High head coach Rob Leary has some pretty lofty ambitions.

After completing play in the South Shore League last week with a 9-3 record, 11-3 overall, Leary's Skippers embarked on a brutal five game stretch to close the regular season against perennial bigger school powers: Hanover twice and Scituate, Coyle Cassidy and unbeaten Hingham once each.

Can you say battle testing?

"These games should get us ready for the heat of the tourney," noted Leary, a former head coach at Rockland High who is quite familiar with postseason pressure. "These are definitely some good tests to get us ready for the big test."

At the time of this writing, the Skippers had fared relatively well with the "pre-tests" against three straight opponents from the bigger Patriot League. The edged Hanover on Thursday and Scituate on Saturday, both by the score of 2-1, before falling to unbeaten Hingham on the road Monday by a 3-0 score.

"Actually, I thought that might have been one of our best 80 minutes of soccer all season," said Leary of the Hingham game. "We had some chances, and had a couple of tough calls go against us. I didn't feel we were really overmatched. Hingham just capitalized on a few mistakes, as you expect some teams to do, but this was a real encouraging performance from us on the whole."

Fortunately, the Cohasset boys will not have to face any of these teams in the Div. 3 state tourney, which gets underway next Friday. They're all Division 2 schools.

"The thing is, you like to go into the tourney playing your best soccer of the year, and right now I feel that's what we're doing," continued Leary. " Hopefully, we can keep that

Winds blowing Lady Skippers way

Two big wins lift field hockey team to cusp of playoff berth

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

The lights may have disappeared for the season at Fenway Park but they still burn brightly for the Cohasset field hockey players.

Two stunning victories over South Shore League rivals Hull and Norwell have positioned the Skippers one victory away from qualifying for the MIAA state tournament. Any win in the remaining games with Mashpee, Carver and Hingham will catapult the team into the playoffs.

Last Wednesday, the town of Hull probably wished goalie Caitlin Condon never got off the Cohasset bus. She shut out the Pirates in inclement weather conditions. Gale-force winds knocked over benches and whipped the windmill blades at record speed. Yet, the Skippers generated most of the electricity when they flew past the Pirates by a score of 2-0.

A critical dosage of team confidence elevated their play as well as their overall record.

"Regardless of the horrendous game conditions, we stuck together as a team and racked up a win," reflected Liz Condos.

She added: "Our teamwork this year is outstanding since everybody gets along so well."

Speaking of teamwork, the defensive line of captain Danielle Pinkus, Jessie Guilds, and sophomore Catherine Whoriskay continuously frustrated a persistent Hull offense.

When Hull offensive players cracked this line, they faced goalie Condon. End of story? Not quite.

Courtney Caron scored on a penalty stroke. On a corner shot, Katie James drilled into the net thanks to a nice assist from Kristin Howard.

According to Coach Deb Bostwick, the team "played well and stayed focussed".

She added: "We could have done better on the offensive corners and need to improve there. I couldn't believe the wind. The game was almost called."

The winds dropped way off yards to give Mashpee an early 6-0 lead with 3:57 left in the first quarter.

Cohasset then marched 64 yards on seven plays, senior tailback DeWayne Morris had 46 yards on four carries. QB Mike Dooley capped off the drive, taking it in from nine yards out behind blocking from the right side of the offensive line, Casey, Davis and McCarthy, along with a fine downfield block by junior wideout D J Silvia. Connolly then hit the first of four successful extra point attempts to give the Skippers a 7-6 lead with 1:13 to go in the first half.

The teams traded punts on their next series. With a Ferriera sack on third down forcing Mashpee to punt from their 11-yard line on their next possession, the Skippers took over on Mashpee's 29. The key play in this series was a 16-yard reception by Straughn out of the backfield for a first down. Morris went left, taking advantage of the blocking of the left side this time — senior tackle Dan Tarpey, sophomore guard Nick Arment, and a nice sealing block from tight end Connolly — and scored on an option pitch from Dooley from six yards out, (eclipsing the 100 yard rushing mark in the first half, and the 500 yard mark for the season) his sixth touchdown of the season. At the half, Cohasset led 14-6.

Mashpee continued their punt parade, (six possessions in a row ended with a punt) to start the second half.

The Skippers then put the game out of reach, converting both third quarter possessions into touchdowns.

The first score was a two play 47-yard drive, the scoring play was a QB option keeper by Dooley around the right side. Blocking kudos go out to Straughn from his fullback slot, Casey, McCarthy and Connolly turned their men inside. Davis wiped out two would be tacklers, and Arment prevented any Mashpee downfield heroics as he provided protection for Dooley as he sprinted 47 yards into the end zone, virtually untouched for his second TD of the night.

Coach Rolfe was seen sprinting, OK running, down the sideline in unison with Dooley as the crowd rose to their feet to start the celebration.

The final scoring drive was an eight play, 67-yard march. Morris covered 22 yards on the ground, Dooley hit Connolly for 10 yards, Bilodeau for 23 more, then fullback Ted Straughn's third carry of the drive had him barreling left for a six yard score, Teddie's third touchdown in two weeks. Tarpey kicked his assignment outside and guards Davis and Arment trap blocked their men as Straughn hit pay dirt.

Cohasset fullback Ted Straughn (#34) ran for his third touchdown in two weeks at Friday night's homecoming win.

Other noteable performances were turned in by:

Steve Davis boomed three kickoffs inside Mashpee's 10 yard line.

Chris Bilodeau had several fine punt returns, setting the Skippers up in great field position.

Senior placekicker Sean Connolly hit all four extra point conversions. He is 7 for 9 on the season.

Mike Dooley at QB had a strong game, excelling in running the option play.

Tony Truglia was all over the field from his linebacker slot.

Junior running back Joey Kehoe picked up 12 yards on 4 carries coming in as a reserve in the fourth quarter.

The offensive line of Tarpey-Arment-Casey-Davis-McCarthy controlled the line of scrimmage.

Turf Notes

As usual the CHS Pep band and Cheerleaders were outstanding.

The announcing team of John Durkin and Andy Whitney were flawless and entertaining.

The Chain Gang, to include Rick Grassie, Don Davis, Dan Tarpey, Al Snowdale, and Eddie "C" Connolly, are a precision group.

Congratulations to the Homecoming couple for 2003, King Mike Hajjar and Queen Emily Sullivan.

And to Fay Sargent, CHS videographer, who is this year's recipient of the Cohasset Gridiron Club's Book Dedication. Be sure to check out the replay of each weeks game on Wednesday nights at 7 PM on Channel 10, filmed by Fay Sargent.

Mites C-1

Two minutes, two goals and a rocket start to the season for the Coastal Stars Mite C-1 who defeated Pembroke 16 – 2 in their season opener. A flashy first line provided 8 of the goals, with five coming from center Patrick Shea. Shea, who scored the opener, had command of the puck thanks to great position playing by wingers Adam Benson and Justin Fein, and defensemen Brodie Jackisch and Tommy Prendergast. Prendergast provided drama and excitement several times as he broke-up plays deep behind the blue line and then charged back up the ice himself for some razor close shots on goals. Another outstanding playmaker was center Tucker Ambrose, who had 5 goals. Ambrose showed his skating speed and shooting skills with several successful breakaways. Dumping in his own goal was left winger Colby Comeau assisted by Derek Benson at right wing. Charlie Blackington and Declan Leahy proved to be a strong duo at defense, working hard to keep the puck out of the zone. The line of Charley Michalowski with Colin MacDonald and Cameron Lamoureux on the wings matched up well against Pembroke's first line and combined for three goals. The defensive tandem of Kevin Meehan and Garrett Leahy were extremely sharp and did their job well, limiting Pembrokes opportunites to score. Goalie Jake Burchill maintained his focus throughout the win and made many key stops. Good game team.

Mites C-2

The Coastal Stars Mites C-2 logged their first win of the season, a 5-1 decision over the South Shore Seahawks. As a team, the young Stars exhibited solid fundamentals and team play, executing well on both offensive and defensive ends. After giving the Seahawks the early lead, goaltender Matt Boudreau hunkered down for the remainder of the contest, making several impressive saves to shut down the Seahawk offensive threat. The Seahawk lead was short-lived as Jack Evitts picked up the puck at the blue line and skated in to tie the game. The Stars continued to turn up the offensive pressure with some fantastic skating by Sam Topham who made several creative cuts to the net. Joey Redfearn kept the offense going by winning several face-offs in the Seahawk zone. The Stars scored again late in the first period, with Tristan Wiggin collecting the puck on a broken play and cruising in to flip the puck past the Seahawk goalie. Both Thomas Coyne and Matt Doyle exhibited great stick handling and offensive drive, each skating around defenders to get shots on net. The second period saw solid efforts by defensemen Robbie Bertone, and Brendan Evitts as the pair managed to keep the puck in the offensive zone, enabling more opportunities for their line. With 4:32 left in the second period, Robert Reidy battled for the puck on the right side boards and made a nice lead pass to Patrick Graham who beat the Seahawk goalie with a wrist shot, making it 3-1 Stars. Center, Jeremy Archibald also contributed with some key face-offs and great hustle on the offensive end. Later in the second period, defenseman, Michael McPartlin got a stick on a shot fired from close range, clearing the puck to the left side of the net and relieving pressure on his goalie. Tristan Wiggin rushed up the left boards and slipped the puck under the goalie's pads making it 4-1 Stars. With mounting offensive pressure from the Seahawks to start the third period, defenseman Jack Kaetzer and Kal Maier showed great hustle, breaking up several plays and clearing the zone. The game began to open up with several rushes by the Stars including a nifty one by Joseph Proctor up the left boards. On another rush by the Stars, Aidan Beresford's first shot was denied but he stayed with the play and slapped in the rebound for the final goal of the game.

Squirt A

After starting the season with losses to Plymouth and Taunton, the Coastal Star Squirt A's have won two games in a row to even their record at 2-2. In the loss to Plymouth the Stars got goals from Connor McLean, Travers Craven and Ryan Donovan. John Collins, McLean and Jon Meehan each had an assist. In The loss to Taunton, Ryan Donovan scord both goals with assists going to Tyler Martina and Pat Cull. The Stars have shown improvement each week and attained their first win of the season against Hingham in a 2-1 battle of the goaltenders. Kevin Kelly, who made the move to Squirt A right from the Mite level has improved with each game. Goals by Will Schorle and Ryan Donovan were enough to gain the victory thanks to Kelly's efforts as well as solid defensive games from Brian Scott, Matt Entwistle, Pat Cull and Will Schorle. In week four the Stars defeated the Mohawks 6-5. The Stars had six different goal scores in the victory, Jeff Durkin, Tyler Martina, Will Schorle, Ryan Donovan, Travers Craven and the game winner by John Collins. Assists went to Connor McLean, Will Schorle, Tyler Martina Alex Evans, and Matt Entwistle. The Coaches are very pleased with the improvement that the boys have shown in the early going and especially proud of the unselfish play making and discipline positional play that they have demonstrated.

PeeWee C-1

The Coastal Stars Pee-Wee C1 team beat a tough Braintree team Sunday October 19 with a score of 3-0. John Carrigg, the Stars' goalie collected his second shut-out in only three games. Brian Meehan, playing left defense, got the scoring started at 7:13 of the first period with a strong wrist shot from the blue-line. Creating havoc in front of the net were center Justin Yeager and wingers Geoff Evans and Gordon Smith. The Star's second score was made by Kevin O'Connell who fired a hard unassisted shot from the left corner that slipped by the Braintree goalie's weak side. Also on the attack were center Andrew Bell and right wing Mike Caira. O'Connell's goal came at 14:20 of the second period. The Stars kept the pressure on Braintree throughout the game with strong offensive and defensive play. Keeping Braintree out of their offensive end throughout the game were defensemen Connor Ofsthun, Chris Fazzina, Mike O'Halloran and Meehan. The Stars final goal came at 13:31 of the third period when Joe Fitzsimmons scored. Assisting on the Stars' third goal was winger Phil Murphy and defensemen Connor Ofsthun.

Harwich golfers win SSL all-star match

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Harwich golf team is now the undisputed champion of the South Shore league.

At Thursday's South Shore League all-star tourney, the Roughriders top four golfers finished 18 strokes ahead of second place Norwell on their home Cranberry Valley Country Club course to put an exclamation on their regular season title.

Tyler Kett led the charge for host Harwich, shooting a sensational 77, five strokes ahead of the closest chasers.

Harwich wound up with a team score of 243.

The Norwell golfers (261) gained a small measure of revenge against two teams that contributed to keeping them out of the postseason for the first time in the history of the program, taking second ahead of both Mashpee (267) and Abington (269), two teams that made it to Monday's Div. 3 sectional championships.

Cohasset (270) finished fifth, a stroke off Abington's score, and Carver (294) brought up the rear, just as it did during a winless regular season.

Norwell's Max Schenkien tied Harwich's Ried Booth and Mashpee's Craig Devaney for second place in the individual competition, all three shooting 82s.

Harwich's Craig Druschella and Mashpee's Trevor Fronius (84s) were next on the leaderboard, followed by Abington's Bill Carey (86) and Paul Seaberg (88), Cohasset's Kevin Barber (88) and Tim Pilczak (89) and Norwell's Mike Dempsey (89).

Barber bows out at State tourney

Freshman Kevin Barber, CHS's lone representative at Monday's Div. 3 south sectional championships at Cranberry Vallley Country Club in Harwich, shot a very solid round of 86 on a damp and windy course.

The scores, in general, were higher than expected, with conditions no doubt playing a big role. The top 10 percent of the 94 golfers who played advanced onto this coming Monday state championships at Farr Corner in Boxford. Unfortunately, Barber missed the cutoff score of 82.

However, coach Torin Sweeney felt 86 was a very respectable score under the circumstances, particularly for a freshman.

The Skippers golf season was slated to end for good yesterday, with Cape Cod Academy coming to Cohasset Country Club. At the time of this writing on this wet Wednesday afternoon, however, it appeared that match might well be postponed or even cancelled.

momentum going through our last two games."

Senior captain Conor Buick, who admits to being slightly concerned about his team's inability to pull out "big games" this year, also believes this season-ending gauntlet will help his veteran-laden squad in the end, even though it might come at a cost of a few seeding spots.

"We have nine seniors here, and we've all played a lot together, so, obviously, we've got some pretty high hopes," said Buick, the team's sweeper and two-time league all-star who came up just shy of being selected to the All Eastern Mass. team on Tuesday. "I think we have the ability to do very well. We just need to be ready to go all out."

It was the seniors who produced all the offense over the past week. Kevin Dinsmore, a transfer this year from B.C. High, scored the first and set up captain Chris Clark for the second in the hard fought 2-1 win over a very physical Hanover team that the Skippers get again at home tomorrow.

This game was a tale of two halves. The Skippers dominated the first 40 minutes but found themselves holding on for dear life after the break. Coach Leary credited goalie Jesse Brewer and the back four of Buick, fullbacks Trevor Brady and Craig Laugelle ands stopper Sam McDonald for coming up biggest in the win.

"It was just one of those crazy momentum switches you can't predict," said Leary. "We looked so good in the first half, but then we were just hanging on by our fingernails at the end waiting for the final whistle."

Clark added to his team best scoring totals on Saturday, potting both goals against Scituate in the first half. The visiting Sailors scored in the second half to make things interesting and keep the tempo of the game between these longtime neighboring town rivals at a playoff type pitch

So the Skippers head into the last two games of the regular season with an overall record of 12-4. Whether or not they get a first round home game may well be determined by how they make out against Hanover tomorrow and Coyle Cassidy Monday.

The seedings and brackets will be announced by the MIAA next Wednesday, with preliminary rounds slated to get underway on Friday. The Skippers could play as soon as Saturday, Oct. 31.

All-Eastern Mass. choice Brewer one of five CHS players named an All-Star

Senior keeper Jesse Brewer was selected to the All-Eastern Mass team and was also one of five Cohasset players named as league all-stars at the South Shore League coach's meeting Tuesday night.

Buick, as mentioned above, just missed the All-Eastern Mass. However, like Brewer, he was a unanimous SSL all-star selection.

Three of the Cohasset seniors, Clark, Dave Santiago and Craig Laugelle were named league all-stars.

Silver Lake joins Patriot League

East-West Divisions approved in new 10 school league

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Silver Lake will remain connected to Pembroke students in this way at least.

The Patriot League schools voted unanimously last week to accept Silver Lake as its 10th member, effective next school year. This vote came less than five months after the PL schools voted to accept Pembroke High as their ninth member.

The schools will be split up into two five-team divisions. Duxbury, Silver Lake, Hingham, Scituate and Pembroke (which will open its doors next fall) will become the East Division. Rockland, Hanover, East Bridgewater, Middleboro and Randolph will form the West Division.

"In the long run, in terms of competitiveness, this is a good move for the league," said Rockland High athletic director Bob Fisher. "Geographically it makes sense, schedule-wise it makes sense, and from a budget standpoint it makes sense."

Silver Lake also had a standing offer to join the Atlantic Coast League, but Lakers athletic director Bill Johnson felt the Patriot League was simply a better fit for his school at the present time.

"The competition is good and almost every team in this league was a member of the Old Colony League before," said Johnson. "When I started coaching soccer in the mid-1970s, we had rivalries with almost every one of them, so I think it is going to be great to have that again."

The split of Pembroke from the Silver Lake district will essentially break the student body in half. Silver Lake — which will continue to be the public high school for Kingston, Plympton and Halifax— figures to have in the neighborhood of 1,000 students next fall, while Pembroke is expected to open its doors with over 900.

Both schools will be among the larger ones in the Patriot League, with only Randolph, Middleboro and Duxbury also being in that 900-1,000 student range.

The fact that Pembroke and SL will be league rivals has heated up the talk of them also becoming Thanksgiving Day rivals. Pembroke is scheduled to become East Bridgewater's Turkey Day opponent next fall. Silver Lake is 0-6 against present Thanksgiving rival Bridgewater-Raynham, and it's tough to imagine that match-up becoming more competitive after SL loses half of its student base.

Johnson insists, however, that his school will not pull out of this arrangement until B-R can find another rival.

"B-R came to our rescue when we lost our Thanksgiving game with Plymouth," said the Silver Lake Athletic Director. "We know how painful it can be to lose that game. We would never do that to B-R."

One possible scenario that has been raised is simply flip-flopping Thanksgiving opponents: B-R getting East Bridgewater and Silver Lake getting Pembroke. However, though geography and the fact that both E.B and B-R are traditional football powers in their respective leagues may appear to make this a good fit, there may simply be no way of getting around the fact that B-R's student body (1,500) is more than double E.B.'s (670).

Randolph and Silver Lake were originally thought to be part of the new Atlantic Coast League but both schools opted to set its sites first on the Patriot League, with administrators from both schools citing significant travel budget savings. The new ACL includes four Cape teams: Falmouth, Dennis-Yarmouth, Sandwich and Nauset.

With Silver Lake and Randolph pulling out of the ACL picture, the way may now be cleared for Marshfield to jump from the Old Colony League to the ACL, as Falmouth, Plymouth South and North Quincy have already done.

At the moment, Marshfield, with a student body around 1,250, remains committed to the OCL and three far larger schools: Barnstable, Taunton and Bridgewater-Raynham.

Obviously, three or four schools would not make much of a league. Hence, new talks of a merger between the OCL and the Big Three League (monster-sized schools Brockton, New Bedford and Durfee).

There had also been some talk of a few of the smaller Patriot League schools joining the South Shore League, which currently includes six schools (Norwell, Cohasset, Abington, Hull, Mashpee and Harwich, Maspee), with only five of them having a football program (Harwich has a cooperative program with Cape Cod Tech that plays in the Mayflower League). East Bridgewater, the smallest school in the PL, actually applied for admission to the SSL, but was turned down. SSL administrators feeling EB was still too big for its league.

Tuesday, sandwiched around a rematch with Holbrook on Monday. Holbrook defeated Cohasset, 1-0, three weeks ago, despite the Skippers getting 26 shots on net.

As the players' spirits and confidence have risen, so to have the coach's.

"This is the time of the season to be playing your best soccer, and they are," Beal said of her charges.

She pointed to the recent play of keeper CeCelia Chapman and midfielder Rachel Garber as just a couple of examples of players improving over the course of the season.

"It seems like every week, we have a different player coming out of the pack to lead us," Beal said.

for the Saturday match up with Norwell, but the Skippers continued to blow by their opponents, this time by a score of 3-0. The Skippers went ahead 1-0 before halftime thanks to a long pass from Jessie Guilds to Courtney Caron, who tipped the ball in the net. A similar Caron-Guilds combination led to the second Cohasset goal. Sophomore Katie James pumped in the third goal on a breakaway with an assist from Caron.

Condon recorded her seventh shutout of the season but not without a major league assist from Carling Sturino. Late in the game a Norwell player snuck the ball past goalie Condon. Out of nowhere, Sturino dove into the dirt to block the score.

According to Coach Bostwick, "This conspicuous play by Carling got the players on the bench on their feet and cheering. Her agility and alertness was truly amazing. On the defensive end, Rachel Doyle, Liz Condos, and Tess Foley also turned in rock-solid performances."

We're all watching as the girls fight for their tournament spot in the MIAA states.

"We certainly have a good chance this year," exclaimed Deb Bostwick. "The girls know they're capable of winning this week's games. All they need to do is prove that they've got what it takes to win crucial matches, such as Hingham on Friday."

The enthusiastic players agreed with Deb, and said that they will play their hearts out to make the tourney.

The Lady Skippers knocked off SSL rival Mashpee on the Cape Tuesday, 4-2, to sew up their first postseason berth in three years. The Cohasset girls jumped out to a 3-0 lead at the half on two goals by James and another by Caron. Mashpee finally got on the board early in the second half, but Caron added her second goal of the game five minutes later to essentially put the game out of reach.

Orchestra launches a season and a campaign

This weekend, the Hingham Symphony Orchestra opens its 2003/2004 season with a weekend of special events that build community through music.

Weekend of concerts On Friday, Oct. 24 at 8 p.m. at the Hingham Town Hall, Hingham Symphony joins another local non-profit organization, Habitat for Humanity, to combine social service and art in a way that benefits the entire community. The HSO will perform its season debut as a benefit for the Hingham chapter of Habitat for Humanity.

"It's wonderful when two such worthwhile organizations work together," says Habitat Board member Betty Fernandes. "HSO is helping us move a step closer to building another house for a deserving family, and we are introducing our supporters to great music right here in our town."

Tickets at $50 for the Benefit will be available at the door. They include a pre-concert talk with conductor Jin Kim at 7:30, as well as a post-concert reception provided by the HSO.

On Saturday, Oct. 25 at 8 p.m., HSO moves to the new Larson Hall in Derby Academy for its official season opening night. On the program at both concerts is Beethoven's Overture to the Creatures of Prometheus, Haydn's Symphony No. 60, and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. These exciting works will be performed by over 60 young professional musicians, led by conductor Jin Kim. In his seventh season with the HSO, Kim has gained international recognition as an outstanding emerging conductor. He will give an informative explanation of the musical program before the concert at 7:15. Also during the evening, charter members of the HSO's Corporate Advisory Council will be recognized for their enthusiastic contributions to the organization.

Jin Kim conducts the Hingham Symphony Orchestra.

"A live orchestral performance is a unique experience," People are always amazed by the depth of their response — to the music and the whole experience."

— Managing Director, Nina Wellford

Tickets to Saturday's performance are available at Noble's, Hingham Square, and at the Hingham Public Library, or by calling 781-740-5694. $25 adult, $20 seniors, $10 youth through age 18.

The HSO's season includes 12 full-orchestra concerts and two chamber music recitals, as well as several KidsConcerts in local elementary schools. HSO's audience has grown to include youth through seniors, all of whom respond to Kim's warmth and superb musicianship.

"A live orchestral performance is a unique experience," says Managing Director Nina Wellford. "People are always amazed by the depth of their response — to the music and the whole experience."

Launching a campaign

As a result of its rapid growth and a clear mandate from the local audience, the HSO Board of Directors has decided to launch a major stabilization and development campaign, to be called Setting the Tone. Before the concert on Oct. 25, more than 100 HSO supporters will gather at Black Rock Country Club to launch the campaign. Honorary Chair Mary Niles of Hingham will be recognized for her contributions to the HSO over the years, and General Chair Richard King, also of Hingham, will introduce Jin Kim and members of the Board of Directors, who will share the exciting vision of the HSO. The goal of the upcoming campaign is to equalize funding for all aspects of the organization - program, operating, and capital costs, as well as the establishment of an endowment.

"We have raised the level of performance on the South Shore tremendously over the past seven years," says Wellford. "It is clear that people will support an orchestra of this caliber. Right now we are putting into place the organization that will implement the long range goals of the HSO, and we look forward to sharing that vision with anyone in the community who would like to learn more."

HSO plans to serve as the focal point for great symphonic music on the South Shore, with a full season of performances as well as programs such as a composer-in-residence, master classes for high school students, a concerto competition, KidsConcerts for the youngest, and many opportunities for people of all ages to learn about classical music. Members of the Campaign Steering Committee join the HSO Board of Directors in encouraging people across the South Shore to get involved. Call 781-740-5694 for more information.

Harvest of Song at Cushing Center

This fall brings a joyous harvest of song to the South Shore as the Unicorn Singers and the Broad Cove Chorale celebrate 25 years of making music together. The women of the Chorale and the mixed voices of the Singers will join to present Gala, a festive panorama of music on Friday, Oct. 24 and Saturday Oct. 25 at 8 p.m. at the Cushing Center in Norwell.

It was 1979 when the two chamber choruses, both under the direction of Hingham's Margo Euler first combined to present an evening of entertainment that ranged from Bach to Broadway. Gala continues to be a showcase for the many and varied talents of the singers, who hail from nine different South Shore communities. This year they will appear in barbershop quartets, Broadways vignettes, perform as instrumentalists and dancers and execute a host of beautiful music ranging from a setting of Lord Byron's poetry to a rocking Gospel song. At times the audience will be surrounded by sound as costumed singers leave the stage to envelop listeners in this unique musical experience.

Gala is a glittering affair, and a fine wine will be served to audience members at intermission. Following the performance the audience is invited to celebrate with the singers and the director at an anniversary party fit for marking 25 years of music making!

Gala is typically a sold out event and priority is given to Season Subscribers. Subscription information is available on-line at www.bcc-us.com and brochures with ticket order forms are available at libraries in Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth. Tickets for Gala only are $20 ($15 student). Reservations can be made by phone at 781 749-6561.

'Lifeboat' author at Buttonwood Books

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset hosts John R. Stilgoe, Norwell resident and professor in the History of Landscape at Harvard University, on Thursday, Oct. 30 from 7-9 p.m. Stilgoe will present his latest work, "Lifeboat".

Stilgoe has been thinking about lifeboats ever since he listened with his father as the kitchen radio announced that the liner Lakonia had caught fire and sunk in the Atlantic in 1963. Stilgoe began to delve into accounts of other disasters at sea. What he found was a trunkful of hair-raising stories-of shipwreck, salvation, seamanship-brilliant and inept, noble sacrifice, insanity, cannibalism, courage and cravenness, even scandal. Stilgoe deals with the lifeboat as a symbol of human optimism, of engineering ingenuity, of bureaucratic ingenuity, of fear and frailty.

Woven through "Lifeboat" are good old-fashioned yarns, thrilling tales of adventure. Stilgoe is the author of numerous books, including "Borderland", "Metropolitan Corridor", and most recently, "Outside Lies Magic" and "Alongshore". This is a free event. Call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

The evening's speaker will be Joan Gatturna, an actor and historical interpreter, who brings the past to life through the women of the times. Gatturna will portray Paul Revere's second wife, Rachel Walker Revere. Learn how the women of Boston kept the home fires burning while their husbands fanned the flames of revolution.

The cost is $31 for members and $36 for non-members. Reservations will be accepted until Monday, Oct. 20 Please make your check payable to Cohasset Historical Society, and send it to the Cohasset Historical Society, PO Box 627, Cohasset, MA 02025. Pin proceeds help fight breast cancer

Cohasset Jewelers donates $12.5K to Foundation

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If Mark Cirone has his way then every mother, daughter, grandmother, granddaughter, sister, aunt and niece — and all the men in their lives — would be wearing a breast cancer ribbon pin from Cohasset Jewelers.

Cirone's goal is to sell 1,000 of the pins to raise $100,000 for the Susan G. Komen Foundation, the largest private funding source for breast cancer research and community outreach programs.

The jewelry store is on its way toward reaching that goal, having donated $12,500 to the foundation this month. October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

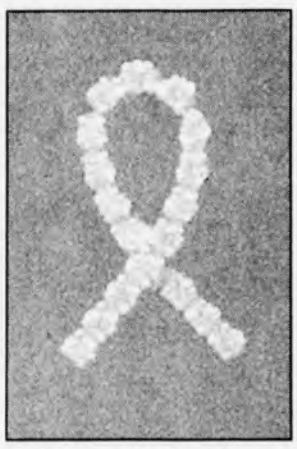
Cirone was inspired by his wife Sharon's courageous battle with breast cancer. His first intention was to wear the pin and bring awareness to breast cancer but after receiving an "overwhelming" response, he decided last spring to sell them to help raise money to fight the disease.

"I feel wonderful on making this donation," Cirone said. "It's been my way to fight back against Sharon's prognosis. It's given me a chance to direct my energies in a positive way to help other people afflicted with breast cancer.

"I'm thankful to be in a position to be able to make a difference and I could not have done it without the help of the great staff at Cohasset Jewelers."

The pins are in 14-karat gold with pink cubic Zirconia. They are selling for $250 with all proceeds ($100 from each pin after manufacturing costs) donated to the Susan G. Komen Foundation.

"The time has long past that we should accept the loss of 40,000 American women every year to this disease," he said. This year along, upwards of 212,000 American women will be diagnosed with breast cancer.



A close up of the breast cancer ribbon pin available at Cohasset Jewelers.

Anyone interested in purchasing a pin should stop by Cohasset Jewelers in Tedeschi Plaza on Route 3A. Please allow two weeks for delivery. Cirone said this week 170 pins have been sold so far.

King Jewelers and ekdesigns join to battle breast cancer

By Mary Jane Hanron
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

King Jewelers is hosting an autumn celebration of style and compassion on Saturday, Oct. 25, to introduce the new collection of ekdesigns jewelry. From noon to 2 p.m., the public is invited to meet Elizabeth Kissick of Cohasset and talented jewelry designer who will be present to greet customers and discuss her unique and popular necklaces, bracelets and earrings.

The event continues the loyal support given by King Jewelers to the fight against breast cancer. June King, owner of the business founded by her father-in-law in 1921, is a breast cancer survivor and inspiration for her family's devotion to this charitable cause. Kissick, also a longtime supporter of organizations that battle this insidious affliction, created a breast cancer bracelet several years ago as a standard in her jewelry line. Proceeds from sales of the piece are donated by ekdesigns to groups that research the disease and care for those afflicted. The silver and crystal bracelet, made in varying shades of pink and adorned with a small sterling awareness ribbon charm is a staple in the wardrobe of countless women, caregivers and loved ones touched by breast cancer.

The ekdesigns jewelry was introduced at King Jewelers in mid August and has been a popular and meaningful addition to the assortment of spectacular jewels at the store. King is the first fine jeweler to present the line and does so with pride and enthusiasm. Kissick began her jewelry designs more than 10 years ago and continues to expand her offerings and concepts, which now can be purchased at King's.

"We are very happy to showcase Elizabeth's work in our store," said Valerie King, treasurer of King Jewelers. "It has been warmly and eagerly received by our customers and fits perfectly with our merchandising philosophy. It's upscale, colorful and meaningful, and created with care and attention to detail.

"Presenting a local designer is a delight. We are so glad to have the work of a community member displayed in our cases along with gems from all corners of the world and creations of famous international artisans." She continued," The ekdesigns collection indicates that Elizabeth shares beliefs and values that we have here at King's, also. Family and compassion, fun and a love of nature are all focuses in her designs. Attention to service, individuality and imagination are priorities, as is never losing sight of what is really important in life."

"It is an honor to show our admiration and support of those who fight so bravely to defeat this disease."
— Valerie King, King Jewelers

Ekdesigns continues its policy of contributing to cancer charities from proceeds from the breast cancer bracelets. King Jewelers is expanding this effort by donating proceeds from all ek pieces purchased the day of the event to the cause. King explained, "Our family has been touched directly by breast cancer through our mother. We also have countless customers who have known the devastation of a cancer diagnosis. It is an honor to show our admiration and support of those who fight so bravely to defeat this disease."

Among the items available to be purchased Saturday will be ekdesigns new and striking fall creations. An innovative palette of colors including 'butterscotch", "pumpkin pie", "Irish moss", "plum pudding", and "granny smith green" is woven into jeweled creations that are dramatic, romantic and whimsical. Ek classics are available, too. Included are "pass it on" bracelets, "trust" bracelets, spiritual jewelry, bridal and "just for fun" jewelry. Special orders and custom designs also can be discussed at the store. Many items are accompanied by cards with prayers or messages that provide hopeful inspiration to the recipient.

King mentioned," According to customers it is proving to be a convenient location for Elizabeth's line. Her studio is nearby, but, of course, we can provide access to ek jewelry all day during the business week. Also, we carry a large range of the collection, from children's baptismal bracelets to her high end signature pieces. The mix of colors is appealing and enticing. The hand-blown glass beads she designs are so unique. Many people buy a piece of jewelry as a gift and then select one for themselves or for us to place on their 'wish list'."

"We invite the public to visit us on the 25th and meet Elizabeth, enjoy our store and ekdesigns, as well as the many collections we have assembled for the fall season. Most of all, we hope customers will join us in the fight against breast cancer and help us to do our part in eradicating this terrifying disease."

For more information, please call King Jewelers, 781-383-1755.

Breast cancer center opening on South Shore

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The South Shore has scored a major victory in the battle against breast cancer.

Digital Mammography & Wellness Center, a new non-profit facility opening in Norwell to the public next month, will feature a state-of-the-art breast cancer detection system designed to improve mammogram image quality, reduce procedure time and enhance patient comfort. It is the first facility of its kind south of Boston, according to officials.

Local and state officials gathered for a ribbon-cutting ceremony Monday at the 59 Longwater Drive location in Assinippi Park. In attendance were U.S. Congressman William Delahunt, D-Quincy, Lt. Governor Kerry Healey, State Rep. Bob Nyman, D-Hanover, State Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth and David Tuttle, state director of the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development. On the local level, Norwell Selectman Rick Merritt and Town Administrator Jim Boudreau were in attendance.

"Congratulations," Delahunt said during the ceremony to those in charge of the facility. "But let me also say thank you. I lost my mother to breast cancer. The fact that you are going out into communities and doing outreach will translate into saving lives. What a wonderful mission."

Delahunt said he feels the center will "provide an incredible service to women" and their loved ones.

"This is the most worthy project you could've possibly undertaken," Healey added.

Gayle Razzaboni, Ph.D., president of the Digital Mammography & Wellness Center, said the facility's mission goes beyond screening.

"We've built a holistic wellness program around the screening," she said.

If a woman comes into the center and is diagnosed with breast cancer, that woman will be provided with a case manager as well as support and guidance through programs at the center, Razzaboni said.

"In a hospital, a woman is diagnosed and she's basically let go," Razzaboni said. "If she was diagnosed with cancer, she has to go tell her family on her own."

She said that is the process the new center is trying to change.

"Without emotional support, the chances of a full recovery are going to be harder," she said. "We'll be there through the whole thing."

The ceremony coincides with October being breast cancer awareness month, but the facility will not begin seeing patients until Nov. 15. Center vice-president Paul Marasco said 15 patients per day will be needed on Nov. 15, 17 and 18, the purpose of which will be to start using and introducing the new digital technology.

Razzaboni said the digital mammography technology is quicker and easier to view than a film-based mammography. She added women get "less of a dosage of radiation" with a digital mammography.

"It reduces procedure time and enhances patient comfort," Razzaboni said.

The center will offer the first state-of-the-art, digital mammography program south of Boston and reach more than 46,000 women age 40 and older in Plymouth County who have not been screened for breast cancer. According to the center, there are more than 800,000 women in the Commonwealth who have not been screened for breast cancer.

Some of the local figures are staggering. According to officials at the center, 62 percent of women age 40 and older in Norwell have not been screened for breast cancer. In Marshfield, that number is 67 percent. In Scituate, the number is 77 percent. In Hull, 65 percent of women 40 and older have not been screened and in Cohasset, 69 percent of women in that age bracket have not been screened. Officials from the center say that in Plymouth County alone, 60 percent of women have not been screened for breast cancer.

During the ceremony Monday, breast cancer survivor Kathryn Gosselin said she is optimistic about the impact the center will have opening on the South Shore.

"I'm here as evidence that this is really a good thing," said Gosselin, who was diagnosed with breast cancer in April of 1999 even though her family never had a history of the disease.

"Nothing prepared me for the emotional turmoil of the diagnosis," she said. "I felt an overwhelming sense of being alone."

She said when she learned the center would be built on the South Shore, she "was elated."

"This is a great asset to the community," Hedlund said.

According to the National Cancer Institute, other than skin cancer, breast cancer is the most common type of cancer among women in the United States. In 2003, an estimated 211,000 women will be diagnosed with the disease.

Haunted Hayride scares up some fun!

Ryan Connors, James Reichardt, Sage Stebbins, Claire McCarthy and Adam Yeager scream at some frightful sights along Saturday's hayride.

Don't go in there, says Brodie Jackisch as he peers out from behind a hay bale after going through the haunted barn on Saturday's hayride.

John Kinchla puts on a scary face as he drives the tractor for one of the haunted hayrides. The event was sponsored by St. John Masonry and Kinchler Hydroseeding and benefits the Our World Children's Discovery Museum playground project.

At right: Claire and Trevor Glavin play in their costumes at the DPW building after going on the Haunted Hayride on Saturday to benefit the Our World playground project.

Living changes

In our continuing efforts to provide as much comprehensive and local news as possible in some challenging economic times we have made a decision to scale back our Living section.

We will continue to provide a comprehensive weekly listing of South Shore events in the arts community and beyond in your newspaper. Beginning this week readers will find a two-page calendar section highlighting happenings around the region.

Portions of the Living section — including our popular garden column Green Thumbs Up — have moved inside the newspaper alongside our local news, features and editorial coverage. As additional space becomes available we hope to expand our regional arts and entertainment coverage.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

NON-DISCRIMINATION

Hearing breaks down into two basic parts–threshold, the ability to perceive how loud sound is (volume), and discrimination, our ability to perceive how high or low it is (pitch). Sound moves in waves (cycles), and hertz describes the frequency of those cycles. The higher the frequency, the more cycles; the greater the number of hertz, the higher the pitch. Age-related hearing loss most often starts with deficits in discrimination, because the ear loses its ability to register higher frequency sounds. As a result, sounds formed by some consonants and blended consonants, such as "f" and "sh," which are uttered at higher pitch than vowel sounds, tend to sound alike. This is an indication of hearing loss.

Two important steps you can take to protect your hearing are wearing ear protection in loud, noisy environments and having your hearing checked regularly to stay on top of possible hearing loss. Hearing tests are easy, comprehensive, painless ways of evaluating this precious sense. If you've never had a hearing test, or if it's been awhile since your last one, take a little time today to call us at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144. We're conveniently located at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We offer FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

P.S. Many people with age-related hearing loss say they can hear just fine. They just do not understand what is being said.

A legion of questions, no answers

Two officers are still on paid leave

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Town officials are still mum on why two police officers are out on paid administrative leave, one of whom is commander of the 4 p.m.-midnight shift and has a high profile in town.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Sgt. William Quigley and Officer James McLean, who are both officers in the police union, are not under any disciplinary action right now. Haddad said he is working with town counsel on the matter that might not be resolved for a month. He said the officers have not been charged with anything and only know that they are on paid leave.

Haddad's action has stirred the rumor mill in town with anonymous calls placed to the Mariner alleging Quigley is on leave because he arrested the police chief's 25-year-old son, Keith A. Jackson. Questions about preferential treatment for the chief's son are also being raised.

"This is no way to treat employees and it is a waste of the town's money. Essentially the town is paying the officers not to work."
— Doug Louison, attorney for the officers

Quigley arrested three men involved in what he described as a minor altercation outside the Legion Hall on Summer

ZBA OKs Avalon

200-units with 30 conditions

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

At first there was total silence in the downstairs meeting room at Town Hall. Scott Dale, project manager for AvalonBay, looked concerned as Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick made a motion to deny the 200-unit apartment complex.

But the air of negativity was just Chittick's way of getting potentially unpleasant business out of the way first. His motion failed for lack of a second and the ZBA then voted unanimously to grant AvalonBay a comprehensive permit.

That means the Virginia-based company, which has apartment complexes in Hull and Weymouth, got the go-ahead to build the project on 62 acres on the west side of Route 3A, pending the expected

Cedamere ready to do battle over access to town sewer

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Members of the Cedarmere development team say they have put a lot of time and money into preliminary plans for their proposed development and are ready to take legal action should the Sewer Commission vote to deny their project access to the town's sewer system.

There are two major arguments the team is prepared to support, namely that it is illegal to reserve sewer capacity for the future, and after much research, that there is enough sewer capacity for Cedarmere to hook up.

Kelli and David Calhoun and Tom Ragno, the developers, were hoping to get their answer at a meeting with the Sewer Commission Wednesday night after the Mariner went to press, but in an interview Tuesday, Sewer Commission Chairman Ray Kasperowicz said if the issue did come to a vote, it was very unlikely it would pass.

"We can have sewer because we're willing to provide the infrastructure."
— Kelli Calhoun, Cedarmere

"My guess is, it would probably be declined," he said, adding he could only speak for himself as one of three votes necessary, but knows his vote hasn't changed. However, he did say views could change or the meeting could be continued, should new, compelling information come forward at the meeting.

But Monday, the developers said they have a case they're ready to present and feel it holds enough water that they would prevail in court, should that step become necessary.

In a letter to the Sewer Commission, dated Sept. 29, 2003, the Cedarmere team stated its argument that previous court cases have set the precedent in sewer matters like this. As a result of those cases, the Massachusetts Supreme Court has ruled that property owners have a legal right to a sewer connection upon a showing of adequate sewer capacity, provided they have made a proper application for a permit and the resulting sewage does not pose an immediate risk of overloading the existing common sewer system.

"The plant is sitting over there operating at two-thirds of its full capacity," said David Calhoun, adding the current plant has a design capacity of 400,000 gallons per day and has a current permitted 300,000 gallons per day.

Deer danger is down the road

Police warn local motorists

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Deer accidents are way up in town, in fact they are the highest Chief Robert Jackson can recall in his 25 years with the police department.

"We usually have one or two deer-related accidents a season," he said.

There have been five motor vehicle collisions involving deer since Sept. 16, Jackson said.

In fact, a deer crossing sign by Wheelwright Park on North Main Street has been installed to alert motorists to the danger.

"Deer are in rut this time of year and they are moving around a lot," Jackson said. "Many motorists may not be aware there is a problem out there."

"Many motorists may not be aware there is a problem out there."
— Police Chief Robert Jackson

When the bucks are in "rut" — or heightened sexual activity — they looking for does, and therefore may cross the road.

No one has been injured in the accidents but one car sustained $2,000 in damage, he said.

"We've been very fortunate no one has been hurt," he said.

Another trouble spot is Route 3A between Sohier Street and lower King Street, near Sunrise Assisted Living.

The Insurance Institute in Washington, D.C., a communications organization supported by the insurance industry, says more deer-auto collisions occur from October through December than at any other time.

Village Christmas festival approved

Amyra O'Connell of Village Wine and Spirits and Kathy O' Malley of the Historical Society were granted permission by Selectmen Tuesday night to have a Christmas festival Saturday Dec. 13 from 5 until 7:30 p.m. and Sunday Dec. 14 from noon until 4 p.m.. The two women spoke on behalf of 30-plus business owners and merchants in the Village who envision having a small, family-oriented Christmas festival, which hopefully will become an annual tradition. During the festival, the street will be closed from Cohasset Hardware to French Memories, and various booths will be set up in the street for food, drinks, and crafts, and possibly a children's carousel, children's activities, Christmas carolers, sleigh rides, and a best store window contest, where children vote for their favorite decorations. In addition to the outdoor activities, each merchant would have various activities in their shops as well.

Cedarmere public hearing postponed

Members of the Planning Board were scheduled to hold a public hearing on Cedarmere last week, but were asked for a continuance by members of the Cedarmere team due to Chairman Al Moore's absence. The new hearing will take place Nov. 5 at 7 p.m. Town Planner Liz Harrington said for anyone interested in the meantime, the Cedarmere team has filed a completed drain report as well as a traffic report, which are available in the Planning Board office.

Price could be set for Cook Estate

Town Manager Mark Haddad presented the Board of Selectmen with the latest draft of the Request For Proposals for the Cook Estate project, and have asked that they review it and come up with possible changes if necessary. In addition, Haddad has suggested the Board set the minimum bid price of $5,250,000 for the purchase of the property, which will be discussed and finalized at the next meeting, scheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 4.

Red Lion Inn changes manager

James Dean, 21 Atlantic Ave, has been appointed as the new manager of the Red Lion Inn. He has been employed at the Red Lion Inn for more than two years and is currently a managing partner. Michael Hayes, President and Treasurer of Cohasset Sarro, Inc. (the corporation that owns the Red Lion Inn) said "it has taken three years to get a solid management team, and we're not going anywhere."

Fence still an issue at Olympic Citco

While the Zoning Board of Appeals has decided to overturn the Building Commissioners denial of a permit for George Roukounakis to install a fence on his property at 55 South Main St., Town Manager Mark Haddad strongly recommended to the Board of Selectmen it should appeal the decision. Because Roukounakis' intention is to install a fence near the middle of James Lane, which runs between the Red Lion Inn and the Citco station, Haddad believes the ZBA has potentially caused a severe public safety hazard.

"Until the issue is resolved, putting a fence in the middle of the roadway isn't going to solve anything," said Haddad.

However, Michael Sullivan said someone should take action to cure the encroachment, not tell Roukounakis he can't put up a fence.. He suggested sending a letter to the owner of the Red Lion Inn, which is encroaching on the property lines with its new brick walkway and may have to move it in light of the situation.

Haddad said he will speak to Town Counsel to see if the Board can in fact appeal the decision and the issue will be brought up for discussion again at the Tuesday, Nov. 4 meeting.

Historical Commission has opening to fill

John Connell is moving out of town, and is leaving behind is position on the Cohasset Historical Commission. He hopes in his absence, the "Delayed Demolition" project that members of the Commission have been working on for so long will continue to gain support. Anyone interested in serving on the Historical Commission should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105 or stop by Town Hall.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall this week:

Board of Health, Nov. 10, 7 p.m.

Conservation Commission, Oct. 30, Nov. 13 , 7:30 p.m.

Paul Pratt Library Trustees, Nov. 12, 7 p.m., at the library.

Land, budget, bills and wires – oh boy!

Special TM has a packed agenda

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With the special fall Town Meeting just around the corner, voters can be assured there will be a variety of issues on the table for discussion this year. On Monday, Nov. 17 at 7 p.m. in the Cohasset High School Sullivan Gymnasium, residents can cast their votes on 21 articles covering everything from the downtown revitalization project to new buses for the schools, to upgrading memorial sites around town.

The town will be asked to vote on the amount of $73,471 to be paid to Deutsch Williams Brooks DeRensis, the firm the town contracts with as Town Counsel, as an unpaid bill, and will also be asked to approve $234,961 to balance the town operating budget. Other budgetary votes include the endorsement of appropriations for various accounts including the Department of Public Works, Board of Health and library as well as the addition of $28,769 to the town's stabilization fund.

While selectmen have already signed the purchase and sale agreement for the Cook Estate property, the town will vote to authorize the purchase of the land at $4,500,000, for the purpose of developing senior housing in accordance with the town's Senior Overlay District bylaw. Other articles dealing with the purchase of land include the Community Preservation Committee's request that the town approve money from the Community Preservation Fund for selectmen to use toward the purchase of property interests in the name of the town, and the Board of Water Commissioners' request to purchase one or more parcels of land in town, for the purpose of protecting the sources of the public drinking water supply.

As part of the Village's Downtown Revitalization Project, the town will be asked to vote to add an "Underground Utility Conversion" section to the current bylaws, which gives voters the final say in whether utility wires will be buried underground in the downtown area. Areas to be included in the article are South Main Street from Depot Court to Brook Street; Elm Street from South Main Street to Brook Street; Brook Street from Elm Street to South Main Street; Ripley Road from #100 Ripley Road (post office) to Depot Court; the Rear Parking Lot from James Way to Pleasant Street; and Pleasant Street from #2 Pleasant Street (Pleasant Street Parfait) to Ripley Road. The town will also be asked to approve a concept for a possible streetscape, which could include concrete sidewalks and a variety of other materials for borders.

Capital requests for the schools include $35,000 for a new special education van, and $60,000 for a new school bus. On the municipal side, requests in the amount of $823,000 must be approved to make equipment purchases for departments in town, including a new ladder truck for the fire department, departmental radios for both the fire and police departments, as well as a multi-purpose vehicle, brush chipper, and utility vehicles for the Department of Public Works.

In addition to the capital requests, the town will vote on whether to approve spending $90,000 to help cover the costs of the renovation, reconstruction, and repairs made to the police and fire station building located on Elm Street, including furnishings and all costs associated.

Other matters which will help make repairs in town include the approval of $25,000 to be put into the Private Way Repair Capital Account, which would be used to make temporary repairs to private ways in town. Voters will also decide whether to approve $15,000 in funds to make improvements, restore, and upgrade the various memorials around town, which honor those who gave their lives serving the United States.

Along those lines, the town will also decide whether to rename the intersection of Beechwood and South Main streets as "Allen A. Buffum Corner," after a World War I veteran who was killed during action in World War II in 1942.

The Office of the Building Commissioner may soon be required to publish all building permits issued during the previous week in the local paper, excluding those issued for interior alterations and re-roofing, if voters pass the article. It could also soon be necessary for the office to issue building permits for any signs larger than two square feet, provided the signs are used for identification purposes or are not political signs either attached to a residence or erected in the front yard of a home.

Zoning articles on the Warrant include turning existing apartments into affordable housing units, amending regulations for community buildings, downtown residential dwellings, and large houses. The definition of height in zoning could be changed as well.

Brick sidewalks may not be an option downtown

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"Brick puts you right at your project limit."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The town only has so much money to spend on the Downtown Revitalization project, and that could mean either the town chooses brick, or it chooses to bury the wires.

Now that it will be up to voters to decide at Town Meeting whether the wires in the downtown area should be buried or not, the Waterfield Design Group has been asked to come up with different cost scenarios for downtown streetscape options, including those with and without the wires.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told Selectmen he had reviewed information compiled by the company, which has been working closely with the town throughout the $1.8 million revitalization project. For upwards of seven years, the project has been in the works, and is being paid for by private funds and donations. While many residents have said they would like to see all brick for the sidewalks, recent figures compiled by Waterfield may not allow that to happen, should the wires be buried.

"Brick puts you right at your project limit," said Haddad.

Options compiled for the town in terms of streetscape paving include all concrete sidewalks, all unit paver sidewalks, (which can consist of either brick pavers, concrete pavers or asphalt pavers), concrete sidewalks with unit pavers at corners, and concrete sidewalks with a 16 inch wide unit paver edge.

Haddad told Selectmen there is roughly a $300,000 difference between all concrete, the least expensive option, and all brick, the most expensive. The town would pay $1 million to have all concrete sidewalks, and $1.3 million to have all brick sidewalks. If the wires are buried, it will cost the town an additional estimated $592,000, which would push the project over its total budget if all brick sidewalks were chosen.

Voters will decide the fate of the wires at the Nov. 17 fall special Town Meeting, which will then move the decision making process along. However, questions as to how much of a surcharge residents could see on their utilities bills, and for how long they might have to pay, should the wires be buried, are still up in the air.

Haddad said he will meet with representatives from Verizon and Mass Electric Monday morning to get some answers to utilities questions and will discuss the matter again with the Board of Selectmen at its Nov. 4 meeting.

Fire Department moves back home

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Fire Department will move back into its building on Elm Street next Tuesday. Renovations caused the department to take up temporary residence on Rte 3A in the former Graham waste site. In a related issue, Haddad said the Advisory Committee voted against recommending funds for the fire department to help cover the costs of unexpected changes in construction and a new alerting system, which totals roughly $90,000.

"If this fails, we'll be before the courts," Haddad said, because the money is needed to pay the contractors for work already completed.

Tom Callahan said he thinks the board needs to make a stronger commitment to push back against the architect because in his view, the architect should have been able to foresee some of the problems, like the height of the roof, which caused the town to have to pay more in the long run. However, Haddad said even if those problems were figured into the original bid price, it would have cost more in the beginning, but said he will be in touch with the architect.

Haddad said he, along with Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, Police Chief Robert Jackson, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, and Fire Captain Mark Trask will meet with the Advisory Committee again tonight to discuss the matter.

Executive Session complaint issued

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a complaint was filed regarding executive discussions pertaining to the Cook Estate property. Haddad said the District Attorney will look further into the matter.

A legion of questions, no answers

Street at about 10:30 p.m., Oct. 11. But the men were not arraigned on the charges as was reported in the Oct. 16 Cohasset Mariner.

The Tuesday following the arrests, Police Chief Robert Jackson declined to comment on the arrests that appeared in the weekly log because of a conflict of interest and referred the Mariner to Quigley.

Quigley, who responded to the scene after being alerted by a passing motorist, said the altercation was over a remark one of the men made about a female. Quigley also observed the railing was broken along the handicapped ramp where the alleged altercation had taken place.

The men were charged with malicious destruction of property over $250, affray (two or more people fighting) and disorderly conduct.

In a telephone interview on Tuesday, Oct. 14 regarding the arrests, Quigley said he thought the men were arraigned that morning because court was closed for the Columbus Day holiday the day before.

The information about the arraignment was incorrect. Officer Rick Grassie, who is the Cohasset police prosecutor, apparently did not sign the complaint at court and a court official confirmed there was no record of the incident in the computer at Quincy District Court.

That was confirmed by Keith Jackson, 9 Ash St., who called the Mariner demanding a retraction because he had not been arraigned.

Keith Jackson said he and the two others on the night in question were wrestling on the ground outside the Legion but said they did not damage the fence, which he said was already broken. He said the three were laughing and described the arrest as a "false arrest."

In a telephone interview, Keith Jackson said his attorney, Ronald Rice, presented Grassie with a letter at the courthouse from the manager of the Legion stating the damage to the fence was preexisting. (Chief Jackson is the membership chairman of the Legion and his son is a member.)

Keith Jackson said he and the two others on the night in question were wrestling on the ground outside the Legion but said they did not damage the fence, which he said was already broken. He said the three were laughing and described the arrest as a "false arrest." He said he couldn't say much more because "there's a lot going on."

Haddad also called the Mariner stating a correction was in order because the men were not arraigned and referred the Mariner to Grassie to explain why. But Grassie declined to comment.

Rice said once he provided the letter from the Legion stating the fence damage was preexisting, the prosecutor could not sign the application for a complaint that he had believable knowledge did not occur because he couldn't swear to the facts as being true. Rice said he warned Grassie that he would perjure himself if he did so.

Rice also said "wrestling" is not a crime and that the arresting officer should not have jumped to conclusions about the fence. It is not clear why the charges of affray and disorderly conduct were not brought forward.

Last week, Haddad placed Sgt. Quigley on paid administrative leave along with McLean, who is a long-time friend of Quigley's. Haddad also fired Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy the same day. Murphy is a long-time family friend of Quigley's. Both police officers are union officials, who have recently been outspoken about some allegations of unfair labor practices and nepotism at the police department, sources say.

Sources also say Quigley was the shift commander when Keith Jackson's girlfriend and her father went to the Cohasset police in July alleging Keith Jackson had physically assaulted her on several occasions. An arrest warrant from Quincy District Court was issued for Keith Jackson stemming from that case. An internal arrest number was issued for Keith Jackson on his appearance for photos and prints at the Cohasset Police Department but Jackson's name, address and charges did not appear in the public log, sources say.

At the time, Chief Jackson told the Mariner his son was involved in a domestic incident, but the Mariner did not pursue it because there was no arrest noted in the weekly log.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Chief Jackson said no arrest appeared in the log because his son was not arrested; he surrendered at Quincy District Court. He said there is a restraining order on file at Quincy District Court and the Mariner could go there and look at the file. He declined to comment about the officers; who are on leave, or allegations of preferential treatment for his son.

Haddad has stated categorically that his action regarding Quigley was not due to the arrest of the chief's son outside the Legion Hall but due to "on going" issues. He said Murphy, the animal control officer, was fired because of complaints.

Doug Louison, an attorney with Merrick and Louison, who is representing both McLean and Quigley, described the matter as "unsettling" for his clients. Louison said he wrote to Haddad as soon as the men were placed on leave asking for an explanation and had not received a reply as late as Tuesday afternoon.

"This is no way to treat employees and it is a waste of the town's money," he said. "Essentially the town is paying the officers not to work."

Louison explained that under Civil Service law, officers cannot be discharged without first being advised of any charges and then the town conducts a hearing.

Haddad has stated categorically that his action regarding Quigley was not due to the arrest of the chief's son outside the Legion Hall but due to "on going" issues.

- Town Manager, Mark Haddad

But if they are not discharged or suspended, there is no law requiring the town to inform employees why they are on paid administrative leave. He said he would rather not speculate on whether Quigley's leave is related to arresting the chief's son.

Louison did say the officers "are anxious to be informed about this so they can address it."

Quigley has been involved with many arrests and has a high profile around town.

In response to a warning letter from selectmen over alleged liquor license violations, Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, launched a scathing personal attack on Quigley in a Sept. 12 letter to selectmen accusing him of being on a "power trip." Quigley authored most of the police reports involving the alleged liquor license violations at the establishment.

"Part of my duty as the supervisor of the evening shift, which is when these types of violations present themselves, is to monitor all licensed premises in the town, and I do just that," Quigley responded in a letter to Haddad. "I am also following a written department directive from the police chief, which states to monitor and log all complaints at the Red Lion Inn."

But Quigley also received two recent commendations from Chief Jackson for his work establishing a student police academy and for his quick action knocking down a fire at Harborview Apartments. In the commendation from the fire, Chief Jackson stated in a letter to Quigley, "your actions taken at no small risk to your own personal safety bring distinction to you and the Cohasset Police Department."

The other two men arrested Oct. 11 with Keith Jackson were Jerry Cogill, 25, of 71 Doane St. and Adam Thibault, 22, of Winthrop Road in Hingham. Cogill is police Sgt. David Cogill's nephew.

Haddad said he would provide selectmen with a report next Tuesday on how much overtime would be used to cover shifts while the officers are on leave. He said with minimum manning three officers are required to be on duty at all times. However, if a shift has four officers only three would be required eliminating the need for overtime in that case, he said. Officer Brian Curran, who is the chief's son-in-law, resigned about a month ago, meaning the department is short another officer.

Cedamere ready to do battle over sewer

"There's lots of capacity," he said.

In addition, what they feel will negate the question of capacity altogether is the fact that they are willing to make improvements to the current system through an Infiltration Inflow program, which would help patch up areas of leakage, and therefore boost capacity of the plant by a little over 15,000 gallons per day — an amount equal to what Cedarmere would expend. Therefore, they believe their project will be one of "zero impact" in terms of capacity.

But the developers claim they are willing to do more. They also say they would pay for a cassette upgrade of the existing plant capacity, which they said would bump up the design capacity to roughly 450,000 gallons per day. But even without those extra gallons, by utilizing the 400,000 it is designed to handle, developers said the plant is still able to accommodate all of the anticipated tie-ins of the Little Harbor area, Atlantic Avenue, Jerusalem Road Extension, Old Coach Road, and a 60-unit senior housing development on the Cook Estate, along with the 105-units of Cedarmere. During a meeting Monday, they said there would also be enough capacity for Avalon.

But along with the cassette upgrade, developers said they will also explore access to the town of Hull's capacity for future Cohasset projects, and work to further the sewering of Little Harbor.

Cedarmere came forward and submitted a proper application so other projects in town, such as Avalon, don't have a legal claim on the capacity, the developers said. Because they say it is illegal to reserve capacity, and believe previous court cases will back them up, they feel any other project, which had come before the town in the past, should have been granted capacity, providing they went through the proper application process.

However, AvalonBay was told there was not enough capacity for its development to tie in, and it in turn began looking at on-site options. If Cedarmere was granted a connection, there has been some speculation as to whether Avalon would take legal action.

"The horse is out of the barn, they didn't apply and didn't look into it as far as we did," said Ragno.

In addition, residents of the Little Harbor area — deemed a priority by the Department of Environmental Protection — have also been seeking a connection, and would in effect be pushed out of line if Cedarmere is granted permission. But developers said in that case, the problem is still not an issue of capacity, but a lack of infrastructure. They claim it would cost the town between $10 million and $13 million for the Little Harbor area to put in the infrastructure, which it can't afford. Because it would take years before the town would have the money to hook up that section, Cedarmere says holding on to capacity for Little Harbor is illegal.

"We can have sewer because we're willing to provide the infrastructure," said Kelli Calhoun, adding they are private developers and will use their own funds to make the connection happen. There will be no cost to the town, no impact on and capacity, and the infrastructure will run by abutters homes who will be able to use the pipes to hook up as well, Calhoun said.

Cedarmere is being proposed under the town's new Senior Overlay District Bylaw, which requires a special permit from the Planning Board. The bylaw, which permits higher-density housing than would otherwise be allowed, requires the development include a percentage of affordable housing. It also requires those units be "counted" by the state Department of Housing and Community Development as part of the town's affordable housing inventory. It is the first project in town to file under the new bylaw.

If all goes well for the team, they hope to be able to break ground by the spring. However, if the Cedarmere team is denied access, David Calhoun said it is possible plans would change. He said planning for an on-site system is time consuming because of the state permitting process and there are always a number of technical issues that come up. In addition, site changes may mean design changes, which he is not in favor of. "We didn't spend all this money to change it."

Deer Hill says 'Thanks!' at rededication ceremony

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Bubbling over with excitement, students wandered in single file to take their seats in the new Deer Hill "Gym-atorium." Waving to friends across the crowd, overjoyed at not only a celebration of the completion of renovations at their school, but the prospect of being out of class on a Friday afternoon, it was surely a day to be remembered.

"It's a terrific day and the sun is hopefully still shining down on us as we celebrate today," said Principal Keith Gauley, as he welcomed guests to the school last Friday. Members of the Board of Selectmen, School Committee, Building Committee, state legislators and the Cohasset community were all there to share in the celebration.

To begin the ceremony, the entire crowd rose to its feet as a procession of color guards from the Boy and Girl Scouts marched both the American and Massachusetts flags down the aisle and led everyone in a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance.

The first distinguished speaker of the afternoon was Supt. Edward Malvey, who asked that all the students and staff stand and be recognized for living through this project without complaints and without missing out on any education.

"I want to thank you for going through this project successfully," he said.

Malvey also asked that any adults in the audience stand and be recognized for their contributions to the project.

"Let's give them a very strong ovation so they can hear north, south, east, and west how very thankful we are for what they have done for us here in Cohasset," he said.

Malvey also recognized the school "had an individual steering the bus," throughout the Deer Hill construction project, and that there will "always be a little part of Paul Callahan," in the Deer Hill school, to which the entire audience spontaneously erupted in applause and little voices could be heard cheering for the school's former principal, who was in attendance.

The Boy Scouts present the colors during the Pledge of Allegiance at the Deer Hill rededication ceremony on Friday. For more photos, see page 19.

Other speakers included Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, and Building Committee Chairman Robert Spofford, who all expressed their thanks to each and every person and board that helped make the project such a success in such a timely fashion.

But representatives from the local community weren't the only speakers on hand. State Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley were also in attendance.

"It is an honor to be here and be among so many nice and friendly people here in Cohasset," Hedlund began. He went on to say he was planning on giving his short speech to get the students home in time to do their homework, to which cries of "No!" burst forth from the crowd. "Ok, I heard you, then I'll give my long speech," he said, to which the crowd cheered "Yeah!" and clapped their hands.

Hedlund offered his congratulations to everyone and presented a special certificate in light of the momentous occasion.

"I understand through my spies you have a very active Student Council," he joked, and invited fourth grader Whitney Jaffe, who serves as Student Council Vice President, up on stage to accept it on behalf of her school.

And it was apparent the students love their new school, when Bradley asked, "Do you like the new school?" and was answered by a rowdy, "Yes," followed by an "I didn't hear you," and even louder applause, cheering and feet banging. "That's what I figured," he said. Bradley also had a certificate to present to the school, which Whitney gladly accepted as well.

McMorris said usually, for a celebration such as the one at Deer Hill, the Board of Selectmen present a gift as well as a proclamation. However, she thought it would be in the best interest of everyone not to have to sit through a lengthy speech, and asked what would be appropriate for this kind of a celebration. Although it was suggested to her that fireworks would be perfect, unfortunately, the Board of Selectmen "didn't have enough money in the budget for that," she said. Instead, she gave the school $250 on behalf of the Board, to be used to buy books for the new library on local history and government.

Kim Arouca, a representative from Congressman William Delahunt's office presented sixth grader, Emmi St. John, Student Council President, with a flag for the school, which was flown over the U.S. capital.

Lisa Pratt, Deer Hill PSO President gave the school $500, to be used for finishing off any last minute items such as landscaping or benches, and an additional $2200 which the PSO began setting aside when Adrienne MacCarthy was president, to be used specifically for the purchase of a new set of swings upon the completion of construction, which received possibly the loudest cheers of the day.

"Evidently, $500 talks, but six sets of swings moves spirits," said Gauley.

Deer Hill's renovations were part of a $52 million project to update the town's schools, which began with the building of the new Osgood School, to the tune of $10 million. Deer Hill and the middle-high school have been undergoing construction at the same time, at a cost of $10 million for Deer Hill and $32 million for the middle high school.

The day ended on a very positive note for everyone who attended, and with 375 children waiting to be dismissed to sheet cakes in the cafeteria, Gauley looked out at a student body, very grateful to everyone who helped make the day possible, who cheered, in unison on the count of three, "Thank you!"

OPINION

Defensive driving to avoid hitting deer

We readily admit we're driving a lot more cautiously after writing our story on deer-car collisions this week.

We were amazed to discover that here in Cohasset there have been five accidents involving deer over the past month.

Unfortunately there is little we motorists can do to protect ourselves, but the Insurance Information Institute does recommend the following:

- Be attentive in early morning and evening hours, the most active time for deer.
- Be alert and drive with caution when you are moving through a deer-crossing zone. Look for other deer after one has crossed the road. Deer seldom run alone.
- Slow down and blow your horn with one long blast to frighten the deer away. If necessary, use your high-beam headlights to see the deer better.
- Brake firmly when you notice a deer in or near your path, rather than swerve to avoid them. Swerving can confuse the deer as to where to run.
- Wear your seatbelt. Most serious injuries in car-deer crashes occur because people were not wearing their seatbelt.

There's a combination of reasons the deer are more active this time of year. Male deer are looking for females, females want to fatten up for the winter, and there are a lot of deer. According to MassWildlife, our area has about 20-30 deer per square mile — about three times the recommended number.

In many ways it's nice to know deer, coyotes, wild turkeys and other furry and feathered friends like it here. Most people love animals and seeing them roam around makes us feel good. But no one wants to run into an animal, whether it be the neighbor's cat, a raccoon or a deer. Because deer are large animals, they can do a lot of damage to a motor vehicle and cause personal injury.

Awareness will certainly help somewhat. If you pass a deer, flashing your headlights at on-coming traffic to warn drivers something is up might help. Be sure to report any accident, even a minor one, to the police, who have a check off box on accident reports for deer collisions. That way the state will be better able to compile data on deer-related crashes.

Cook Estate deal is not all it appears to be

TO THE EDITOR:

Our selectmen and town manager have authorized spending tens of thousands of our tax dollars on the proposed development of the Cook Estate and town-owned land. They say the town will be reimbursed sometime next summer when the purchase/sale closes, but the truth is we will only receive reimbursement if a closing happens. If the town doesn't locate a buyer who can build the housing the selectmen want on the property, the deal doesn't go through and the money is gone, permanently. The result will be less free cash and potentially higher taxes for all of us.

I agree with those who say our seniors have few housing options and need alternatives that will allow them to stay in town. We passed the senior overlay to promote senior housing development under the control of our Planning Board and selectmen. It has been successful; several projects have already been proposed: Cedarmere, the proposal to build behind Shaw's and the proposal to build units off of Beach Street. In addition, Avalon Bay is still in the picture. It may be that some of these projects are not desirable to the town but some of them, like Avalon, we may not have the ability to control. Any or all of these projects may move forward and could generate more than 400 new units of housing in our town...more growth than this town has seen in the last 20 years combined.

On top of all these proposed developments is our selectmen's plan to build up to 95 units on the Cook Estate and the abutting town-owned property. If these other proposals were not in the works, and developers were not clamoring to build under our new zoning, I would agree with the town's involvement in an effort to promote senior housing. But the fact is these other developments are in the works and I have to ask, why is the town so determined to compete with these private developments at our expense and further increase the amount of growth?

If a developer wants to build senior housing on the Cook Estate, fine. If the town feels compelled to 'control' this development, fine. That is why we have the senior overlay. Any development would need to meet our zoning requirements and be supported by the selectmen as a local initiative project. We should not, however, be required to bundle the town-owned property with any development, nor should we be spending our tax dollars to pay for engineering, consulting, and the RFP and selection processes.

This project is being sold as an alternative for seniors of various income levels. We are being told the town will control this development and it will make it much better and more affordable than the other private developments being considered. While it is true that the project requires a developer to provide a minimum of 14 low income units and 14 moderate income units, this percentage of affordable units is very close to what has been proposed at Cedarmere. Beyond this and the ability to prove their financial viability, there are almost no other requirements for the developer to meet in the draft version of the RFP.

Developers are not required to price the other units in any way other than 'market rate'. It is entirely possible (some might say likely due to the high cost of the land) that any responses to the RFP will propose units as or more expensive than what is being proposed at Cedarmere.

We have already paid thousands of dollars for a consultant to assist us in the negotiations with the Cook Trustees and an appraisal of the Cook property land and the town-owned land. We have hired this consultant to continue to assist us for 9-10 months at an estimated cost of $10,000 per month. We are in the process of hiring engineers to perform due diligence at a cost of $20,000. Add it up; it's a lot of money.

I am not opposed to senior housing nor am I opposed to affordable housing. These are things we need in our town. We have private industry willing to step in and help us meet this need. We are already facing a potentially enormous amount of growth. Should town officials really be promoting more housing that, while it does provide some affordable units, is not substantially different from the proposed private developments? Should we be risking our tax dollars and town land to subsidize a project that may not be affordable for a large portion of our seniors?

Read the RFP, attend the meetings, educate yourself and come to Town Meeting.

Don't package town land with Cook Estate

TO THE EDITOR:

Please take the time to read Article #4 on the warrant for the November town meeting. It combines a number of very important issues into a single decision for voters. It asks us to:

- Approve a $4.5 million bond in order to purchase the Cook Estate.
- Sell the Cook Estate to a developer to build up to 95 units of Senior Housing.
- Sell the town owned property abutting the Cook Estate to the same developer to build Senior Housing.

There is no reason to have these issues combined into a single warrant article, these issues can and should each be addressed in separate articles. I am not opposed to the development of senior housing on the Cook Estate but I don't see the need to also use the town owned land for this purpose.

The Cook Estate is comprised of 21.948 acres of mostly developed land. The town owned property is comprised of 8.715 acres of undeveloped woods and wetlands. The town seems determined to build on this land; in the past decade the town has attempted to put a police station, cemetery and school on this parcel. The most recent proposal for senior housing has been languishing for the past several years for the same reasons all the other proposals failed, the parcel has not been accessible, it abuts Peppermint Brook and it has a large amount of wetlands. Now that the Cook Estate is for sale, some town officials believe this is the perfect opportunity to access and develop this land.

Directly across Peppermint Brook and adjacent to the town land being eyed for development is the school property containing the Nature Trail and observation platform which are used by hundreds of Osgood school children each year as part of their science curriculum. This is a beautiful wooded area, when you are at the school platform no structures are visible except in the dead of winter. The destruction of the woods and the development of the land directly across Peppermint Brook from this area will have an impact on the nature trail. The children will have their lesson at the platform while looking at a large three story apartment building a few hundred feet away. Although the children should have a clear view of the residents coming and going, I'm not sure how much nature will be left for them to observe.

Some people believe we have enough open space and we should develop this land, I believe we have enough development in our town and should protect the open space we have, particularly this property which is environmentally sensitive and helps to protect our water supply. Once this land is sold, it is gone for good; we will never regain this area as open space again. The town has been supportive of both the development of senior housing and the protection of open space; by building only on the Cook Estate we can do both.

Gas station fence clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you for the recent article concerning my fence situation. However, one point I feel that was missing is that this present situation was made worse by my neighbors when they rebuilt the Red Lion Inn. At that time I contacted the town and voiced my concerns that the stone wall, part of the porch and landscape were on the right of way. The right of way was made even smaller from the Red Lion Inn side. Now it looks as if I am making a bad situation worse.

I would like to thank Mr. Chitick and the Board of Appeals for their proper decision concerning this issue. Maybe they understand the bigger picture and realize it is not of my making. I am only asserting my right as a property owner outside of the footprint of the right of way.

HEALTH NOTES

Cohasset has much to thank Joe Godzik for

By Steve Bobo

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Last Friday, a party was held to honor the career and service of Joe Godzik our health officer since 1984. Actually, Joe retired on Aug. 7, but he has agreed to work on a part-time basis until we can find a way to provide the support to the Town which Joe has given us over the past 19 years.

At the party, Neil Murphy, head of a local engineering firm succinctly summed up the associated eulogies given by various politicians, colleagues and others by saying, "I can't think of anything Joe has done badly." Those of his family who spoke seemed to have the same opinion. It would be difficult for any of us to find someone about whom we could make such a statement unless they had done nothing. But Cohasset is living proof that the Board of Health under Joe's leadership has done extraordinary things for this town:

• Most of the initiatives that you have read about in this column found their origin in discussions with Joe and his competent nursing staff of Judy Fitzsimmons and Corinne Cahill.

• Because of his broad knowledge and a gentle and persuasive manner, Joe was able to deal with a succession of Boards of Health during particularly difficult times when the state was trying to implement the new Title 5, a wastewater policy which would attempt to solve massive environmental problems which were facing our increasingly populous communities. Cohasset, a town with particularly difficult wastewater problems, was at the center of a battle about sewers and the scope of Title 5 implementation. Joe's inputs were crucial to the several health boards coping with this problem.

• Cohasset Heights and Cedar Street Landfill battles were given temper and reason by Joe's broad knowledge of the problems and his assessments of the health risks and benefits of the various measures being proposed.

• I've spoken long and hard about the environmental issues in town and the need for a special stewardship required from its inhabitants because of the difficult nature of the soils here. But it was Joe who proposed a regulation which will actually reduce the pollutants entering our water bodies — the so-called 400 foot rule which requires nitrogen removal from any septic system within 400 feet of a named body of water.

Dr. Joseph Godzik stands outside his office at Town Hall, as Board of Health office manager Tara Tradd looks on.

• A town-wide non-smoking campaign was and led by Joe, in part, I suspect because of the loss of his wife, a smoker, to cancer.

• The school lunch improvement campaign was launched and resulted in substantial improvements of the healthy eating habits of our kids, initiated by Joe's constant, and sometimes not so gentle pressure.

• Joe espoused the concept of walking and increased exercise for the town and planned its development by working with walking advocate, Mark Fenton and by helping to secure funding for walking trails from the Community Preservation Committee.

• Joe single-handedly wrote and finished the Town's storm-water plan and obtained one of the state's first licenses for a joint EPA and State local National Pollution Discharge Elimination System permit, saving the town thousands of dollars. Many towns have hired contractors to prepare these documents, leaving them with an expensive piece of paper with little understanding of its importance. Joe's careful scrutiny of the town's needs led to his preparation internally, of a plan which coordinated the Water Commission's activities with a planning and mapping grant prepared by the Board of Health and a school public service program to accomplish environmental monitoring which will have a long term impact on our town's effort to clean up its water bodies.

• These things have quickly come to mind; there are many, many more. So, while others have talked about Joe's activities statewide with the Lung Association, the Mass Health Officers Association, and many other causes, it is for us, in town, to recognize and appreciate his contribution to our health, comfort and safety.

Politically correct and boring holiday

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I can see it now. It's Halloween. My doorbell rings. I answer it. It's a little boy, maybe three or four years old. He has a pillowcase. I reach for the Mars bars I have cleverly placed beside the living room door.

But before I can drop it into the pillowcase, a hand older than three or four years old grabs it. A light is shined in my eyes. I am asked to produce identification. I show my driver's license. The man with the light checks it against some numbers on a handheld computer. He nods.

The first man passes it on to another man, whom I recognize as a member of the local chapter of the ACLU. He has a light, too. He examines the wrapper of the Mars bar closely. He too checks a handheld computer, finds that Mars is the Roman god of war, unsullied by the taint of Christianity. He nods and passes the bar on to a woman.

Don't laugh. It's been coming to that ever since the grownups hijacked Halloween from under the kids...

She is wearing a nurses uniform with a stethoscope around her neck. She snips a bit of chocolate from the Mars bar and puts it under a microscope. Then she dumps the snip into a test tube of bubbling green liquid. The liquid remains green. She nods her head, too.

Then and only then is the kid allowed to step forward and hold his pillowcase open and I am allowed to drop the Mars bar, battered but newly qualified as a legitimate trick or treat, into the pillowcase.

Don't laugh. It's been coming to that ever since the grownups hijacked Halloween from under the kids, took the fun out of it and turned it into what they determine to be a safe, healthy, politically correct — and boring holiday.

Take the current holiday, which comes Friday — reminds me that I gotta buy some Mars bars.

Police Chief Philip Consentino of Atkinson, N. H. (pop. 6,200) decreed that his town is off limits to Massachusetts youngsters who are in a trick or treat mood. And there are a lot of them, the city of Haverhill (pop. 56,000) being just across the state border.

"We've had problems in the past," the chief told the Manchester Union Leader. "Every now and then, we spot a car full of trick-or-treaters with Massachusetts license plates and we stop them and tell them to leave."

By the time Consentino's edict reached the Bay State, the chief had pulled back a bit. "If they're Massachusetts-registered vehicles, we would just politely ask them not to trick or treat in our town," he told the Lawrence Eagle Tribune.

At the same time, Cynthia Dunham, the principal of Wayland's Claypit Hill School, sent a note home to parents to let them know that the school's annual kindergarten costume parade, its biggest Halloween celebration, had been cancelled for reasons that sounded suspiciously PC.

"We do have children that don't celebrate Halloween and feel uncomfortable or stay home from school that day," she wrote. "We want to be an inclusive community and meet the needs of every child."

I'm not sure even the Pope recalls that Halloween originally was All Hallow's Eve, which, I suppose elevates trick-or-treating to the status of a sacrament.

And then there's Maria Buckley, a health care lawyer from Salem, who thinks we ought to substitute a small toy for the pieces of candy that we give out on Halloween in the interest of healthy, slender children.

"I try to watch what my child eats," she says. "Because of my work I hear a lot about childhood obesity."

Well, I'd better get ready for Halloween. But no toys, please. Just Mars bars and an occasional Snicker. And I'll give them to whoever shows up, Christian, Jew or Muslim or maybe even a Hindu. Then I may send them on to Atkinson, N. H.

Putting the gardens to bed this time of year

GREEN THUMBS UP

SUZANNE MAHLER

For many South Shore gardeners, the month of October is bittersweet. In typically colder areas, killing frosts tend to strike early in the month, often before we are ready to see the growing season come to a close. Meanwhile, neighbors who garden in warmer coastal locales or in sheltered areas may be fortunate enough to elude deadly chills until later in the month or perhaps, even into November. Eventually, often gratefully, temperatures plummet signaling the inevitable end to our growing season as plants enter dormancy and frosty evenings turn the foliage of delicate annuals black while the glorious yellows, golds, oranges and reds of sensational fall foliage come tumbling to the ground.

Once killing frosts blacken the foliage of tender annuals and vegetables and the leaves of perennials become brown and crispy, it is time to start the process of putting the gardens to bed. Perennial borders should be trimmed, raked and weeded in the weeks to come. A thorough cleanup reduces the possibility of suffocation or diseases caused by dying, decaying, soggy, wet foliage and minimizes the damage done by slugs, snails, insects, voles and chipmunks. Plants that have entered dormancy are best cut back to 3 to 4 inches tall. A heavy-duty hedge shears can effectively reduce a jungle of dead foliage to a neat and tidy border in minimal time.

Take a moment to observe and analyze the waning plants before chopping them to the ground. Some seed heads and foliages provide winter interest by contributing texture, motion and sound to the dormant landscape including those of ornamental grasses and sedums. Other seed heads, especially those of coneflowers (both Echinacea and Rudbeckia), asters and goldenrod, produce seeds loved by many bird species including chickadees, titmice and goldfinches. Selective pruning of unattractive, decaying foliage will maximize the appearance of evergreen perennials and shrubs, fruit-bearing plants, and attractive seed heads.

Prepare the vegetable garden now for planting next season. Begin by lifting and removing frost tender plants. Avoid composting tomato foliage or any other leaves which may have been diseased. To rejuvenate depleted garden plots or improve poor or heavy soils, spread several inches of organic material in the form of shredded leaves, seaweed, well-decomposed manure, or compost; topdress with lime or wood ashes and turn all the amendments into the soil with a digging fork or a tiller. In exposed areas, consider planting a cover crop of winter rye that can be tilled into the soil next spring. A fall cleanup, conditioning, and turning of the vegetable garden will ensure an earlier planting season next spring.

High on the priority list following a hard killing frost should be the digging and storing of what are termed "summer bulbs." Canna and calla lilies, caladiums, tuberous begonias, dahlias, and gladiolus should be lifted, dried and stored before freezing temperatures manage to damage their fleshy storage systems. Use a digging fork when lifting these tender bulbs to reduce the risk of bruising, slicing or injuring the bulbs which could lead to disease or rot during their winter storage.

Dry cannas, calla lilies, caladiums and begonias in an airy, dark place, without danger of freezing for a few days. Cut off dead foliage and gently brush off dried soil. In heavy, clay soils, it may be wise to wash off crusty lumps attached to the bulbs with a stiff spray from a hose to rinse and clean the bulbs prior to drying rather than risk damaging the bulbs in an effort to remove hardened earth. Soil allowed to cling to bulbs during their storage may contain insects and diseases. Be sure to thoroughly dry damp bulbs to prevent winter rot.

The corms of gladiolus should be lifted while the stems are still attached to prevent injury to the bulbs. Once they have been dug, the stems can be cut to about an inch from the top of the corms and dried in the sun for a few hours. Cure for about 2 weeks in a well-ventilated area. Store in a cool, dry environment.

When dahlia foliage has turned limp and black from a hard frost, cut the stems back to 4 inches prior to digging and carefully loosen the clusters of fleshy, tuberous roots from the surrounding soil. Wash away any remaining soil and dry completely for one or two days.

Store dried bulbs in shallow trays or porous bags containing dry peat moss, sawdust, perlite, or vermiculite which will absorb any excess moisture but will also prevent the bulbs from becoming dehydrated. Bulbs should not be exposed to freezing temperatures or excessive warmth during the storage period. Temperatures between 40 and 50 degrees are ideal. Brown lunch bags are handy for keeping bulbs through the winter months as they permit the bulbs to breathe but prevent the bulbs from drying out. Label the outside of the bag with the type and color of the enclosed specimen. If storing multiple bulbs together in boxes or trays, be sure to check them periodically during the winter months for any evidence of disease or insect infestations and remove any spoiled bulbs to prevent others from becoming infected.

Any cleanup that can be accomplished at this time of year will give you a head start on the spring rush and will lessen the risk of losses due to weather, disease, or critters during the winter months.

'Givers' vs. 'takers' ignites debate over government services

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The give and take about the givers and takers was the most interesting news of the week. A speech given by Administration and Finance Secretary Eric Kriss activated the progressive wing. He said that while the ratio of "givers" (net contributors) to "takers" (net recipients of services) was 9 to 1 under Lyndon Johnson, it is now approaching 2 to 1. This, Kriss said, makes the current level of government services unsustainable, unless radical reform of the way government operates is adopted.

He said the hopeful part of the picture is that reform of government procedures truly can be the solution — but he used spending on courthouse construction and operation as his example, not delivery of health care and other human services that consume most of the budget and that are driving up costs the fastest. The administration's opponents seized on the speech as revealing what Kriss and Romney are really all about. "It's an attempt to create a narrative to justify another round of vicious cuts," said John McDonough, director of Health Care for All. Progressives also questioned Kriss' definition of "takers," and said he deliberately chose pejorative language to describe people who need help from the more fortunate.

As always, taxes loomed over the conversation. Michael Widmer of the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation described Kriss' choice of words as "unfortunate" and said the administration is too quick to rule revenues out to get the ratio of givers and takers back in balance.

The University of Massachusetts weighed in with a study demonstrating that taxes were cut $5.5 billion between 1996 and 2002, fueling a fiscal problem of approximately the same magnitude when the economy soured. But for his part, Kriss made clear he believes the economy was better off in the first place because of the tax cuts, and raising them now would do very little to build the sustainability that is his goal, and presumably everyone's. "California is my Exhibit A," his speech said.

The controversy built to the point where the governor was forced to respond, assuring reporters that his people were "not going to change the responsibility of government to meet the needs of our citizens and fulfill its promise."

The progressives don't believe it. They believe ruling out taxes this year is a case of changing that responsibility. Still, the question of sustainability remained, and while everyone was expressing an opinion, no one — not the progressives, not Kriss, not Romney — was putting on the table the specifics of a plan to maintain services, at current levels, for the long run, without the necessity of future tax rate hikes.

Another group of Bay Staters is about to become takers – as in, "if you want to smoke, take it outside."

• Statewide smoking ban clears house, by veto-proof margin — The governor has yet to say for sure whether he'll sign the statewide smoking ban approved by the House, but it passed by more than the two-thirds margin needed to override a veto. The Senate is likely to follow suit, though Republicans slowed the bill's momentum last Thursday. The Herald reported Romney's Bain and Co. had extensive connections with RJ Reynolds, helping it distribute cigarettes more widely and boost sales. Romney said he doesn't know yet whether he is for or against a ban.

• Push to get Canadian drugs for Mass. workers — Some of the state's biggest public-employee unions are now lobbying the Group Insurance Commission to follow Springfield's lead and start illegally buying prescription medication from Canadian suppliers to contain costs. The governor said rather than breaking the law, he'd like to see the Legislature act on his proposed amendments to the bulk-purchasing plan he sent back during the summer. Federal officials joined pharmacists at the Statehouse to warn the trend opens avenues for the sale of counterfeit or adulterated drugs, while lawmakers pushed legislation to make Canadian drug buys legal and safe.

• Romney turns to Harshbarger, signals corrections changes coming — In the wake of revelations about inmate mistreatment and related problems in the prison system — possible factors in the death of defrocked child-abusing priest John Geoghan — Romney said the Harshbarger Commission could result in changes in the top management at the Department of Corrections. The governor named former Attorney General Scott Harshbarger head of the investigatory commission. A separate investigation into Geoghan's death continues.

• Snow plows operators to be kept honest via GPS tracking — "It's Big Brother, but what the he." So said one snowplow operator, learning that the state is going to issue GPS-equipped cell phones to plow contractors this winter, to make sure they're doing the work for which they're paid. The plan was announced by the Highway Department. Lawmakers have long under-funded winter cleanup accounts and complained that the department is not controlling costs.

• Senate, House in accord on DNA database expansion — The Senate voted to agree with the House version of a bill expanding the DNA database to include all felons. After defeating an amendment exempting felons who steal poultry or forge railroad tickets, the Senate voted to create a five-member committee to study antiquated criminal laws and recommend crimes for reclassification. Supporters of the bill say it will help investigators solve more crimes and lead to the exoneration of the wrongfully convicted.

• All emissions machines will be checked — With federal authorities investigating the Department of Environmental Protection for possibly covering up problems in the auto-emissions inspection system, Commissioner Robert Golledge announced all 1,505 inspection stations in Massachusetts will be required to test and repair their emissions-inspections equipment. The state plans to keep the current testing system, and the $29 fee, in place, Golledge said.

• Study: 35,000 students could have education cancelled — A report submitted to the Board of Higher Education found that 35,000 people enrolled at public higher education institutions may have to drop out because of state budget cuts and a lack of financial aid. Student grants and loans will have to be increased by nearly $26 million to make up for budget-crisis tuition hikes, the study found. The study's authors added that more budget cuts are likely.

Tax bills due, OK to pay online

Fiscal Year 2004's second-quarter tax bills are due Nov. 3. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4114 to confirm their correct mailing address or the Treasurer-Collector at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

The Town of Cohasset now offers residents the option of paying their real estate tax bills via the Internet. The eBill system takes the town's billing data and posts it on the Metropolitan Communications (MCC) Web site, which allows residents to view and pay their real estate tax bills. At 25-cents-per-transaction, the new payment option costs residents less than a postage stamp.

Residents can arrange for bill payments to be automatically withdrawn from their checking or savings account, and eBill will be accepting credit card payments shortly.

Currently, residents are able to pay their real estate tax bills with eBill. Next month, residents will also be able to pay motor vehicle excise taxes and water/sewer bills using the eBill system.

To find out more information, or to make a payment, please visit the eBill web site at www.mcc.net.

Register to vote for Nov. 17 STM

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or Election Day may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Meeting on Nov. 17, is Friday, Nov. 7. The Clerk's office will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before the cut off date.

ZBA gives Avalon greenlight with 30 conditions appeals.

"This has been a remarkable process," Chittick said after the meeting. "But it's not one I would want to live through again.

"But I've been impressed with how constructive everyone has been."

Dale said Avalon had confidence in the ZBA and that made the long and at times, grueling process worthwhile.

AvalonBay filed for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B — the state affordable housing law — that allows developers to skirt local zoning regulations, such as housing density, in exchange for providing 20-25 percent affordable housing.

Although no one popped the champagne, there were handshakes all around following the decision to grant the permit with some 30 conditions ranging from a daycare center to reducing the grade of the driveway into the proposed complex from 8 to 6 percent.

Unlike the yearlong public hearing process that closed last month, the public has sparsely attended the ZBA deliberation sessions. Monday night Avalon officials and the Mariner were the only members of the audience.

But the lack of attendance stands in stark contrast to the controversy the project has generated over the past 14 months, with the Water Commission asking the ZBA for an outright denial because of concerns about its septic system polluting the town's water supply, and a citizens group, dubbed Cohasset Action, saying the project will drain town services and flood the schools.

Monday's vote did not come without some protracted discussion, which has been the norm throughout the process. Monday's discussion centered on the proposed daycare center, which is expected to be a condition of the permit, and the affordability "count" that the Avalon project would provide the town.

The final draft of the decision which will enumerate the conditions was not ready at the meeting but should be available at the Town Clerk's office by the end of the week.

The ZBA expressed concern that during any appeal — which would delay the project — the town would remain vulnerable to another 40B developer.

ZBA consultant Mark Brobowski explained the town wasn't out from under the onus of 40B until any appeals have cleared.

The good news about Avalon is the state counts all units in a rental project — because of the dearth of rental housing — toward a town's goal of attaining 10 percent of its housing stock as affordable by state standards. That means if Avalon survives the appeal process and gets a groundwater discharge permit from the state Department of Environmental Protection for its septic system, all 200 units would "count" putting the town at precisely the 10 percent threshold and getting the town out from the threat of more 40B projects.

But the prospect of what could be a long appeals process loomed in the minds of both Avalon and the ZBA.

"I can't imagine anything in Cohasset won't be appealed," quipped Avalon's battle-worn attorney Steven Schwartz during the discussion.

Chittick said an appeal would work against both the town's interest and the interests of the appellants because it would leave the town open to more 40-B filings.

Doing some math, the ZBA pointed out in condominium projects, only the affordable units "count" so the town would have to absorb a total of many more housing units to reach the 10 percent benchmark.

In other words, 800 condos would have to be developed under 40B with 25 percent affordability for the town to get the 200 units in its "count" that Avalon would provide.

The decision this week is expected to fine-tune the language in the condition seeking a daycare center for the project. Avalon says it is enthusiastic about a daycare center and will pursue it but only if it makes financial sense.

The ZBA, which has pushed for the daycare center because it thinks it will fill a need and help integrate Avalon into the community, still wants to have some oversight over traffic and other issues that might arise from the center.

Rails with Trails study to step off

MBTA questions project's feasibility

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The process of starting a "Rails with Trails" initiative in the town of Cohasset has begun, and if all goes as planned, could provide access to walking and biking trails, which would run parallel to the tracks of the Greenbush line, and could one day serve as a continuous path from Hingham to Scituate.

Members of the Board of Health, including Chairman Steve Bobo and Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, as well as Community Preservation Committee Chairman Stuart Ivimey, met with members of the Alta Planning & Design team Tuesday, to discuss the feasibility study they have been hired to conduct, including any key issues that could affect the development of the trails.

Paul Smith of Alta Planning & Design said the largest obstacle in these beginning stages is going to be the MBTA. He said after speaking with one of its representatives, he was told the MBTA was "not on board with this."

Lisa Bailey of the Waterfield Design Group, which is affiliated with Alta Planning & Design, and who has also worked on the Downtown Revitalization project, said she contacted the MBTA to try to get information regarding the layout for the rail bed, and was told the Rails with Trails project the town is proposing doesn't sound feasible. However, Bailey noted that is exactly the reason a feasibility study is necessary.

The town decided on Alta Planning & Design to conduct the feasibility study because it had the most flexible set of plans as far as the MBTA and its plans were concerned. The feasibility study is being paid for with $25,000 from the Community Preservation Fund, and its completion is the first step in obtaining a 90 percent grant from the Federal Department of Transportation, which would pay for the path under state "greenspace" regulations.

However, aside from opposition from the MBTA, the town may have to gain the support of residents who live in close proximity to the tracks.

In order to make sure residents have a chance to become familiar with the project, tentative plans have been made for public hearings as well as a presentation at Town Meeting.

"There will be a certain amount of opposition," Godzik said, noting many people will most likely have concerns about people walking and riding their bikes near their homes. He feels there should be some sort of educational process where people in town can ask questions and get the answers they need, and hopefully be a part of the effort to move the project ahead. In order to make sure residents have a chance to become familiar with the project, tentative plans have been made for public hearings as well as a presentation at Town Meeting.

As far as Smith and Bailey are concerned, the next step for them in continuing on in their study will be to walk the corridor again to really become familiar with the area. Because some areas near the rail bed are wetlands, a solution will need to found as to how they should be dealt with. Smith suggested because there are going to be 11 grade crossings throughout the town, the trail doesn't have to run parallel to the tracks on one side for its entire length. If the path was diverted over a grade crossing, which is where the tracks meet the road, it could change the course of the path and steer it away from wetlands.

However, Ivimey worried about children having to cross not only the street, but the crossing as well, which Bobo said wouldn't be a problem once the MBTA completed the crossings and all safety measures were put in place.

Other possible alternatives to getting around wetlands include building wooden bridges in areas where they border the paths, or looking into access over a small percentage of resident's property, if necessary, which Ivimey did not think was the best alternative.

One aspect of the plans everyone at the meeting thought the MBTA would favor, is the fact that the trail could increase ridership on the train. Because the town parking lot does not accommodate a large number of cars, residents might decide to walk or ride their bikes, rather than fight for a parking spot and deal with the traffic. In light of that, Bobo said investing in bike stands should be looked into.

Because the trails are meant to provide easy walking and biking access to various points around town, Bobo said there is a list of connecting areas he would like to see included the feasibility study, including the library, downtown shops, playing fields, schools, ball fields on North Main Street, the cemeteries, town offices, restaurants, amusements, historical places and possibly the proposed Cook Estate property to gain access for seniors who would live in the housing there. He believes the trails should be utilized by people of all ages and physical activity is always beneficial.

Smith said he was very impressed with what he has seen in Cohasset because, "It's very unusual for the Board of Health to take the initiative on a project like this."

At the heart of the Rails with Trails project is the Board of Health's commitment to battling obesity, which it believes can be greatly helped with regular exercise. Bobo said the battle against obesity is one that will have to be fought for the next 30 years, much the same as the battle on smoking. Meetings will continue with members of various boards around town and the feasibility study is slated to be completed before the annual Town Meeting in March.

Deer danger is down the road

And MassWildlife says the population of deer on the South Shore and in the southeastern portion of the state is well over ideal numbers.

Females are also out more this time of year eating more and seeking good food sources to get more fat to get through the winter, state biologists say.

Jackson reminds everyone to wear their seatbelts and credits seatbelts with preventing injuries in the recent deer-car collisions. He warns drivers to try and "not to swerve all over the place to avoid a deer."

Deer-motor vehicle accidents have occurred at:

- 5 p.m., Sept. 16, North Main St.;
- 3 p.m., Sept. 26, Rose Hill Lane at King Street;
- 4:50 p.m., Oct. 17, Wheelwright Park at North Main Street;

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Approving Avalon is unconscionable

TO THE EDITOR:

With AvalonBay, Cohasset's ZBA is in the unenviable position of having to spend months of drudgery reviewing and deliberating the issues surrounding this project, within the constraints of law a undeniably unfair to a town such as Cohasset. Yet it is they who are entrusted with the responsibly to decide what will best mitigate the project's impact on our town (or instead simply deny AvalonBay's request for exemption from the laws and regulations the rest of us must follow).

Certainly most believe it is in our best interest to deny AvalonBay or at least to reduce its size and scope to a level where the environmental threats and impact on our town are manageable.

Forcing a 200-unit mega-complex onto our town is perhaps the worst of all ways to meet state affordability requirements. Given the choice, who among us would choose that over comparatively innocuous local projects which allow us to maintain our town's character and environment, while also providing (rather than threatening) the town services we truly need?

Denial of AvalonBay is justified and defensible on the basis that Cohasset will meet state 40B requirements with greater than 1.5 percent of town land devoted to 'certified' housing projects. Our town boards and Town Planner have worked feverishly to demonstrate how this will by met by the senior housing projects now underway.

Working with our Planning Board, Water Commission and consulting engineers, our town's attorney has provided the ZBA with a brief containing the rational and supporting legal precedent for the denial of AvalonBay. Our Selectmen and other boards have requested the denial of the project. And recently a team of people in town have rallied to show how we can successfully beat 40B with Cohasset's own local projects.

NO RINGING ENDORSEMENT

Tinnitus, commonly known for its symptomatic ringing, hissing, and buzzing in the ears, affects tens of thousands of Americans, many of whom experience severe and debilitating tinnitus that can make life unbearable. Even those for whom tinnitus is less of a problem find that it is an annoying and disruptive affliction. Tinnitus is also one of the first signs of noise-induced hearing loss. One way to deal with the problem, called retraining or habituation, forces the brain to cease hearing the tones emitted by the tinnitus. This involves wearing a device that emits a tone of a slighty lower volume than the tinnitus. Over time, the brain stops hearing, it is hoped, the persistant ringing of tinnitus. Most people find it is easier to adjust to wearing a device that masks the sounds of tinnitus than to endure the constant annoying ringing and buzzing sounds associated with this condition. There are many products on the market today that address the needs of the hearing impaired. To find out what's new in the battle for better hearing, we invite you to stop by FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. To arrange a hearing evaluation, please call 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. Tinnitus is now more evident in younger people than ever before.

Skippers skin 'Cats

And 'Dogs up next for unbeaten CHS gridders

The Cohasset Skippers football team improved to 6-0, (2-0 in the South Shore League), with a 13-0 blanking of the Independent League Weston Wildcats last Friday night in Weston.

With a couple of new elements to overcome in this non-league match-up — temperatures in the low 30's and having to play eleven minute quarters (South Shore League games have 10 minute quarters) — the Skippers defense forced Weston to four punts, took over possessions with two turnovers, and halted them twice on fourth down conversion attempts on their way to their second shutout of the season. The Skippers defense has limited opponents to 31 points to date, good for second place for teams in Eastern Mass.

Offensively, the Skippers ate up the clock with 40 rushing plays, and scored twice within an eight minute span in the second half to put the game out of reach for the Wildcats.

The Skippers returned the second half kickoff to their own 35-yard line to begin the third quarter. Senior tailback DeWayne Morris carried ten times for 52 yards on the drive, alternating behind the blocking of the left side, tackle Dan Tarpey, guard Nick Arment, and center Matt Casey, and the right side to include guard Steve Davis, tackle Dan McCarthy, and tight end Sean Connolly.

Fullback Ted Straughn led the way on each of Morris' attempts, punishing the first linebacker to step in his way. Senior QB Mike Dooley snuck into the end zone from one-yard out behind blocks by Casey and Davis to cap off the seven minute drive, and with Connolly's extra point the Skippers led 7-0 with 4:07 to go in the third quarter.

Cohasset's second scoring drive was set up on a third down sack by senior defensive ends Rob Carpenter and Steve Davis. Weston had to punt from its own 6-yard line and the Skippers took over on the Finishing touch sought

Lack of scoring the only point of concern heading a postseason

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Rob Leary is extremely pleased with about 95 percent of what his team is doing right now. However, the first year Cohasset High boys soccer coach is kept awake some nights worrying about how that substandard proficiency in the remaining five percent of the game could come back to haunt his team in the postseason.

State Tourney Boys Soccer
Cohasset @ Avon
Saturday, 2 p.m.

"We're just not finishing our scoring opportunities right now," said Leary, who takes his team into the postseason with a 14-4 record. "Obviously, that's a concern with the state tourney right around the corner. That's something that can come back and bite you in a big way."

Leary watched in disbelief as his team failed on one opportunity after another in Tuesday's regular season ending home match against a far inferior Coyle Cassidy team, and as the game approached the three quarter mark still scoreless.

Senior captain Chris Clark at long last broke the ice in the 52nd minute, and that opened the way to two more goals in the next six minutes. Sophomore Ben Libby doubled the Skippers lead less than two minutes later with his second tally of the season and senior Dave Santiago closed out the scoring in the 58th minute.

"I was happy that we were able to close the deal a few times in the second half, but I really wasn't happy at all after the first half," continued Leary, the former head boys soccer coach at Rockland High. "Our guys were doing a nice job of getting the ball upfield, keeping it wide and then getting it in close, but then we're just not putting the ball away."

Leary said he is pleased with the setup work being done in the revamped midfield with sophomore Matt O'Connell and converted fullback J.T. Oronte in the middle.

And he is also positively delighted with the work in the defensive end, which hardly comes as a surprise considering he's got three league all-stars back there in seniors Jesse Brewer in goal, Conor Buick at sweeper at Craig Laugelle at fullback.

Buick was recently moved back from stopper to sweeper so that Laugelle could be returned to a marking fullback spot. This move was made easier, noted the coach, by the emergence of sophomore Sam MacDonald as a stopperback as well as the continued "extremely steady

Field hockey team to play first playoff game since 2000 today

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

Despite the drop in temperature, the Cohasset High field hockey squad continued to turn up the heat on the playing field. Last week's back-to-back victories catapulted them into the MIAA state tournament for the first time in three years with a 9-7 regular season record.

These wins earned the Lady Skippers the 19th seed out of 20 teams in the Div. 2 South Sectional, and had them travelling to Mansfield today (2:30 p.m.) to take on the 14th seeded Hornets (9-4-5). A win here would put the Skippers in Canton tomorrow (2:30 p.m.) to take on the third seed Bulldogs (14-1-3).

The first victory last week came on a Tuesday when the Lady Skippers avenged an earlier loss to Mashpee by beating the same team, 4-2. In short, the team wanted a victory in a big way. The dynamic duo of Courtney Caron and Katie James produced all four goals and four assists.

On defense Tess Foley, Frannie Noble, Jessie Guilds and Rachel Doyle continuously unraveled Mashpee's momentum. Incredibly, Mashpee could produce only four shots on net.

"Every single person on the entire team played way beyond my expectations," lauded coach Deb Bostwick. "It was amazing to watch such a phenomenal team play to their full potential."

Two days later, the girls emerged with the same level of intensity. Under adverse weather conditions, the Lady Skippers stormed past Carver by a 2-0 score. Cohasset's first goal resulted from a textbook play. Jessie Guilds passed long to senior Courtney Caron.

Cohasset co-captain Danielle Pinkus (#24) has a step on Carver player on a charge down field in big 2-0 win last week for the Lady Skippers that helped them sew up their first state tourney berth since 2000.

Lady booters hope to continue winning ways in postseason

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

Four weeks ago, the Cohasset girls soccer team was 3-6-1 with eight games to go.

In order to make the state tournament for the second consecutive year, the team would have had to either win six games down the stretch, or win their last four league games and hope to sneak into second place there.

As it turns out, they did both.

Starting with a 3-2 win over Abington on the Green Wave's home field Oct. 7, something clicked for the Skippers, and they have been riding the momentum ever since.

The girls have been playing in sync on both sides of the ball. The defense, led by league all-stars Holly Graham and Christine Lovallo, has played some good soccer in front of keeper CeCelia Chapman, who has shown improvement with Courtney quickly dished the ball to Katie James who deflected it into the net.

Caron wasn't done for the day. She assisted Danielle Pinkus, who made the second and final goal.

The Lady Skippers could have lost this game if they let Carver's league all-star player, Kathleen Pinto, dominate the play, but Aaron Bigley and Mia Lieb-Lappen stopped her in her tracks.

"We weren't actually expecting to win this game," admitted senior Kelly Hurley. "We owe this victory to Aaron and Mia, who shut down their powerhouse player."

Coach Deb Bostwick agreed: "Aaron and Mia stuck to Kathleen like glue, completely suffocating her explosive shots and powerful drives. I was amazed at their concentration and determination to keep Kathleen from scoring."

In a non-league battle the next night, however, the Skippers couldn't hold off bigger Patriot League powerhouse Hingham. Despite outstanding defensive play by seniors Tess Foley, Kelly Hurley, and Jessie Guilds, they couldn't prevent a last minute Hingham goal that ended the game with a 1-0 Hingham victory.

Coach Deb Bostwick spoke her mind.

This battle was slightly disappointing, but morally satisfying."

Added Corey Evans: "What a heartbreaker. I guess Hingham just capitalized on our one mistake at the end of the game."

Despite the loss, the Lady Skippers enter postseason play with a great sense of enthusiasm and confidence. Who knows? Maybe they will get another shot at Hingham in the playoffs and turn the tables on the Harborwomen as they did earlier on Mashpee. Win or lose, the field hockey players have gained the admiration of so many Cohasset fans.

each passing game.

All of the defenders have had to step up their games this season, as Cohasset lost one of their best, senior co-captain Brenna O'Donnell, to an ACL injury the third game of the year. And while head coach Deb Beal says O'Donnell has been recovering nicely, her teammates have certainly picked up the slack in her absence.

The midfield and forwards, meanwhile, have been playing together and passing the ball effectively to create scoring opportunities that were missing in the first half of the year. All-star midfielder Jenn Buckley has been a consistent goal scorer and playmaker, while forwards Casey Anderson, Sarah McMorris, Gillian Weber and Lindsay Kennedy have led the attack up front.

And all of this while playing through a treacherous part of the schedule. Starting with a Sept. 22 home game against Harwich, the girls played nine matches in 19 days.

"You get no recovery time through any of those games, and it's tiring," said Beal. "The rest we got after that stretch was well deserved and much needed."

Well deserved indeed, as the Skippers ended the stretch with a three-game winning streak over Abington, Carver and Harwich. Those wins brought Cohasset back up to .500, and set the tone for rest of the season.

And if the Skippers have any luck with today's seedings, they will have drawn a team they've already played. The Skippers played marvelously against teams the second time around. Not including Cape Cod Academy, who they played Tuesday night, Cohasset was 2-5-1 versus teams they were playing for the first time.

In the rematches, Cohasset went 6-2, with their only losses coming to South Shore League champion Norwell and Scituate, a Div. 2 playoff team.

Everyone on the team has contributed at one point in the season. As Beal has said throughout the last month, it is a different girl that steps up each game.

During Monday's 3-1 win over Holbrook, it was junior forward Lauren Rizzotti who "stepped up." Normally a substitute, Rizzotti got the start and responded with a goal just over a minute into the match.

With McMorris hustling down the right side of the field and firing a pass to her in the middle, Rizzotti found the back of the net on a one-touch shot, a beautiful, textbook play that teams work on in August.

"Lauren was just so pumped after that goal," Beal said after the game. "It was a total team effort tonight."

Following the Holbrook win and Friday's 3-0 victory over Cape Cod Academy, Cohasset is 9-7-1 and stands a good chance of finishing with double-digit victories for the second year in a row. And, as their play has improved, team chemistry has been even better, according to the coach.

"They're such a great bunch of girls;" Beal said. "We have all these inside jokes that only we know. Although we want to win, we know that if we lose, it doesn't matter. Our season was a success."

Coastal Stars Youth Hockey Report

Squirt C2

The Coastal Stars Squirt C2 team got off to a fast start picking up their second win in as many games. The Stars defeated a tough Eagles team 5 - 0, behind the outstanding goaltending of Kevin Quinn. Kevin was able to hold the Eagles off with strong support from defensemen Sarah Evans and Jack Nelson. The offense broke out in a big way with Ryan Bertone scoring the hat trick. Charlie Coffman and Andrew Fontaine rounded out the scoring with a goal each. Girard Tierney picked up a pair of assists while playing solid defense. Dan LeBlanc played another outstanding game on defense while picking up an assist and initiating several big rushes into the offensive zone. Patrick Shay and Brian Craig continue their great passing and hustle each getting an assist. The line of David Greenwood, Kevin Friedland and RJ Nuels applied constant pressure in the offensive zone just missing on several scoring bids. The Squirt C2 team looks to extend their streak against Braintree next week.

Squirt C3

The Squirt C3 team continued their winning ways with a 6-1 victory over the Taunton Brewins at Bridgewater Arena. Mike Masciulli kicked off the scoring when he beat the goalie glove-side on a nice pass from John Sinkins. Moments later, Justin Henriksen snapped a pass from the point to Nick Craig at the left post who slid the puck across the crease to Allie Ryan who slammed it home from close range. In the second period Mike Masciulli picked off Taunton passes twice for two quick goals and his second hat trick of the year. Aggressive forward play by Ryan Foohey and Mike Timcoe gave the Stars numerous scoring chances, but all shots were rebuffed by the Brewins goalie who single-handedly kept his team in the game. With time running out in the second period Taunton forwards crashed the net and stuffed in a loose puck to get on the board. Opening the third period, Mike Foley who made a sweet pass to Allie Ryan hustling in from the left side. Ryan then roofed the puck over the sprawled goalie for her second goal of the game. Vinny Calorio closed out the scoring when he rushed in from his defensive position and rifled one just inside the left post. Sam Labo, played solid defense in the third period, breaking up a number of Taunton scoring opportunities. With less than 15 seconds to go, netminder Alec Hurd denied a Brewins breakaway shot with a beautiful kick save, putting the exclamation point on another masterpiece effort between the pipes. Great job Stars!

Mite A

The Mite A Coastal Stars lost a 3-2 thriller to the South Shore Seahawks at the Rockland Arena Sunday, the first loss of the year for the Stars. Strong positional and hustling play by the defensive corps of Kevin McDougal, Jared McCrystal, Jeremy Duchini, Andrew Geddes, and Brian Smith allowed the Stars offense to repeatedly test the Seahawks defense, but the Seahawks were up to the challenge. Jake McDonough was super in goal for the Stars, stopping everything that the Seahawks fired at him and bringing the crowd to its feet with several of his saves, leading to a scoreless tie after one. The Stars continued their pressure in the second period. Frankie Lemieux was stopped out front after a feed from Kenny Parnell, and Chris Cohen's passes to Terrence Doonan led to a couple of robberies by the Seahawks goalie. Colin Whalen played well until he was forced to leave because of illness. The Seahawks snuck a wrister just inside the right pipe near the end of the period to take a 1-0 lead. The Seahawks went up 2-0 on a breakaway goal early in the third period, but the Stars kept coming. Will DeCoste's shot was stopped after a pretty rush down the right side. McDougal made an Orr-like rush down the left side from his blue line, cutting in front of the Seahawk net for a shot that was saved and smothered. Kenny Parnell won the ensuing face-off and made a beautiful pass in the slot to Tommy Dixon, who wasted no time in firing a 15-footer to the five-hole to put the Stars on the board. One shift later, Terrence Doonan stole a Seahawks' pass, streaked down the right side and muscheld a shot that was deflected behind the Seahawks' net. Will Golden, who had hustled down the left wing to keep up with Doonan's rush, beat the defense to the puck and tucked a wraparound goal into the right side of the net. The Stars thought they had the go-ahead goal late in the third when Jeremy Duchini rebounded a Jonathan Spitz shot, but the play was ruled to be a save. The Seahawks went up 3-2 on a goal from a scramble in front of the Stars' net with 45 seconds left in the game. McDonough was pulled for a sixth skater after making a conservatively estimated 23 saves. The Stars kept the puck in the Seahawks zone and had chances to tie on shots by Doonan and McDougal, but the Seahawks goaltender stymied the Stars to the end.

PeeWee C1

The Pee-Wee C1 team defeated a strong Whitman Hanson (WHK1) team with a score of 4-3 in a fast paced game on Sunday October 26 at Hobomock Arena. The Stars got on the scoreboard first with a terrific breakaway goal by center Andrew Bell at 13:45 of the first period. Defensemen Connor Ofsthun made a nice pass to Bell, earning him an assist on the Star's first goal. WHK scored two quick goals late in the first period, however, to take a 2-1 lead into the second period. The Stars came roaring back in the second period following a terrific breakaway goal by the Stars' Andrew Bell. Brian Meehan, playing left defense, made a nice pass that enabled Bell to streak down the ice and slip the puck by the WHK goaltender. WHK scored its final goal near the mid-way point in the second period to take a lead of 3-2. Less than a minute later, however, Stars' center Justin Yeager broke away on a terrific lead pass from Ofsthun and after making a great move in front of the WHK goaltender flipped the puck into the net to tie the score at 3-3. With a game tied at three goals each, defensemen Kevin O'Connell. Mike O'Halloran, and Joe Fitzsimmons along with Ofsthun and Meehan turned up the heat at the blue line and were able to keep the puck in the WHK end for much of the third period. Also pressuring WHK throughout the game were forwards Geoff Evans, Mike Caira, Chris Fazzina, and Phil Murphy. The Stars' tenacity paid off when winger Gordie Smith fired a blistering shot from close range that flew over the WHK goaltender. Earning assists on the Stars' winning goal, which came at 6:41 left in the second period, were defensemen Kevin O'Connell and center Andrew Bell. Filling in for the Stars' regular goalie John Carrigg was Kevin Quinn who was just terrific in net for the Stars. In particular, Quinn made a tremendous glove save near the end of the third period that saved the lead for the Stars.

play" of sophomore Trevor Brady at the fullback spot opposite Laugelle.

"These guys have been doing a very consistent job, but they're not perfect, and their margin for error gets smaller when we're not cashing in on those scoring opportunities," observed Leary.

Leary certainly feels his team has enough options up front, especially after the recent move of team leading scorer Clark from center midfield to striker alongside slick and speedy Santiago and talented sophomore Aidan Buick.

"We have the people there," insisted the coach. "We just need to be a little more patient in our approach."

Two goals from Clark helped the Skippers overcome an early 1-0 deficit on Friday and take a 2-1 win over Hanover in non-league play.

Hanover scored first at the seven minute mark, but Clark got the equalizer three minutes later. The game remained knotted at 1-1 until the 60th minute, when Clark buried a feed from Santiago for the game-winner.

Brewer, who was selected All-Eastern Mass as well as for the South Shore League all-star team, made seven saves in the game, including tow spectacular stops in the latter stages to preserve the win.

Cohasset senior keeper Jesse Brewer continues to shine between the pipes for the Skippers, and his exploits were rewarded last week when he was named not only a South Shore League all-star but also to the All-Eastern Mass. Squad.

Leary figured his Skippers, with their 14-4 record, would get a seed between five and eight for the Div. 3 south sectionals when the seedings were announced yesterday by the MIAA, which should mean at least one home game. The first game could be played anywhere between Friday and Monday.

"We do have high expectations for this playoff," said Leary. "We're playing well in a lot of areas and this is a veteran team that's been there before."

Wildcats 40.

The initial key play had Dooley hitting junior wide out D J Silvia for 15 yards and a first down. Two plays later, Dooley lofted one to the right corner of the end zone from 25 yards out and senior wideout Chris Bilodeau made the catch of the year, diving straight out to haul it in. With 7:13 to go in the game, Cohasset built its lead to 13-0.

The Skippers had several earlier attempts to blow this one open, but had drives end with turnovers at the 1, 5, and 25-yard lines of Weston.

On the defensive side of the ball, the All-League linebacker trio, senior Tony Truglia and juniors Ted Straughn and Matt Casey, accounted for 24 tackles with Casey throwing in a sack for good measure.

Senior defensive back Sean Connolly had his best game of the year with seven tackles, and combined with junior defensive end Kelvin Ferriera (six tackles in only one half of action) to stop the Wildcats on a fourth-and-two attempt from their own 42 yard line.

Junior Matt Baroudi (seven tackles) and junior Leo Clougherty clogged the middle all night from their defensive tackle positions, as Weston tried to no avail to penetrate the center of Cohasset's defense.

The Skippers defensive backfield, juniors Joe Durkin and Crandon Leahy, seniors Bilodeau and Connolly, held the Weston air attack to two completions on 12 attempts.

Turf Notes

Junior Joe Durkin forced Weston to punt after a jolting hit on a third down passing attempt. In his punting duties, he dropped one on the 3-yard line of Weston.

Seniors Chris Bilodeau and Tony Truglia had successive pass breakups to halt a fourth quarter drive by Weston.

Senior Steve Davis caused a fumble by Weston, which Connolly was then all over.

Cohasset 10-and-under softball team competed in summer league

The Cohasset 10-and-under softball team completed a successful season this past summer in the South Shore Softball League. The 10-and-unders competed in a division which included teams from Braintree, Whitman, Hanover, Abington and Duxbury. The team finished with a 4-6 record and was competitive against most of its opponents.

"This season definitely was a learning experience for our girls, most of whom were playing on a travel team for the first time," said co-coach Carol Davis. "Every one of our players improved during the season in every aspect of their game."

Erin Fontaine, who performed most of the pitching duties during the season, was the choice of the coaches for the team MVP Award. "It was a difficult decision because many of the girls on the team made major contributions," said Davis. "But pitching is a crucial part of softball and Erin was the person we depended upon to handle most of our pitching duties." In addition, Erin hit .363 on the season with an on-base percentage of .774 (second best on the team) and led the team in runs scored.

Honors for the Sportsmanship Award went to Lucy Noble. "Nobody worked harder than Lucy to improve," said co-coach Andrew Quigley. "Lucy always did whatever was asked of her. Her commitment to a team effort was outstanding at every game and every practice." After making the adjustment to the stronger pitching in a travel league, Lucy finished with a .466 batting average (fourth on the team) and a .652 on-base percentage (fifth on the team).

However, Erin and Lucy were far from alone in their contributions to the Cohasset squad. Meredith Kelly led the team in hitting with a .647 average and steamed around the base paths for three home runs from the clean-up spot. She led the team in the categories of hits and RBI. Meredith also anchored the right side of the infield at her usual shortstop position with a deft glove and a strong arm. "Meredith is a tremendous athlete who truly was one of the top players in the league," said co-coach Ed Fontaine.

Lucy Noble of the Cohasset 10-and-under softball team displays her Sportsmanship trophy.

Erin Fontaine of the Cohasset 10-and-under softball team displays her MVP trophy.

Samantha Crough, who was another defensive anchor at either the third-base or first-base positions, also was one of the top hitters with a .391 average and a .600 on-base percentage. Sam was second on the team in the categories of hits and runs scored. "Sam is another superb athlete who unquestionably was one of the best players in the league. Sam has it all — a good bat, a good glove, an outstanding arm and great instincts," said Quigley.

In addition to this foursome, the Cohasset team received major contributions during the season from all of their players. In the pitching department, Vicki Wade, Kayla Orner, Jen Mullin and Emma Quigley all tried their hand on the mound and came through with significant efforts throughout the season. "The development of pitchers is crucial to our softball program, both for in-town and travel teams," said Quigley. "Hopefully these girls will continue to have a desire to pitch and will pick up on their effort from this season as they go forward into next year."

Major contributors at the plate and in the field were as follows: Logan Pratt led the team in on-base percentage (.818) and was fifth in batting average (.555); Emma Quigley was second in batting average (.571), third in on-base percentage (.760) and third in base hits and runs scored; Lindsey Davis was fifth in batting average (.421), third in base hits and sixth in RBI; Danielle Sookiasian had an excellent on-base percentage of .566 and was fourth on the team in runs scored; Claire Pozniak hit .300 with an on-base percentage of .444 and was sixth on the team in base hits; Brittany Pinkus had an outstanding on-base percentage of .636, good for sixth on the team, and was third on the team in the RBI department; Dylanne Axelson came though with an on-base percentage of .500 while also turning in a consistent effort in the field at second base; Vicki Wade had a .590 on-base percentage and was sixth on the team in RBI; speedy Kayla Orner achieved a .428 on-base percentage; and Jen Mullin was seventh on the team in on-base percentage (.629) and third in RBI.

"All of the coaches agreed that it was a pleasure to coach this team," said Davis in conclusion. "All of the girls worked hard and improved. We're looking forward to next year's travel team."

UN Day celebrates Cohasset diversity

More than 130 people showed up to celebrate international United Nations Day for the Diversity Committee FRIENDraiser party, held on Friday, Oct. 24.

Many of those attending were pleased to discover the richness of cultures and variety of internationalism within our small community. Guests included those who have emigrated from more than 15 different countries, those who have adopted children from outside the U.S., those who work and travel around the world, as well as those committed to education around international politics, culture and economics. Bringing together representatives of a wide variety of religions, ethnic and racial backgrounds made the evening together a spectacular experience.

The Cohasset Diversity Committee acknowledges its eighth year of providing educational programs and professional workshops on world awareness, respect and understanding of difference to the Cohasset community. Organized by Kathryn Earle, Allison Moskow and Chartis Tebbetts, the genesis of the UN Day party was to provide an event for our adult friends, neighbors and families committed to these values.

Extreme thank you's are in order to Gerd Ordelheide at the Red Lion for donating the Salon De Soleil and administrative staff. The following restaurants provided amazingly delicious selections from their menus: Atlantica, Le Calypso, Casa del Rey, French Memories, Punjab Cafe, Red Lion Inn and the Red Parrot. We welcome new members on the Committee as well as donations or volunteer time from Cohasset residents.

"We deeply appreciate each guest who joined the Cohasset Diversity Committee to make the United Nations Day event a truly successful friendraiser!" said Susan Etkind, former chairman of the Cohasset PSO Diversity Committee.

Harvest Ball to benefit area Breast Care Center

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

For many women on the South Shore who have been diagnosed with breast health conditions, receiving treatment often means waiting at least a month to schedule an appointment, followed by a trip to Boston through heavy traffic. But the new South Shore Hospital Breast Care Center hopes to change all that by teaming up with Brigham and Women's Hospital and the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, to provide the first comprehensive diagnostic and treatment program in the region.

But to provide patients with the best care available takes funding, which is why members of the Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell and Scituate town committees of the South Shore Health and Educational Foundation are holding a Harvest Moon Ball to help raise funding for the center. Through their foundation, volunteer members help raise funds to support various programs at the hospital.

Cohasset resident Victoria Hurley and Hingham resident Jane Hoffman have been working together as co-chairs of the Harvest Moon Ball. Last year, a similar cocktail hour to benefit the center was held at the Casa del Rey in Hingham as a trial fund raiser, to gauge what kind of local support the center would have. The event had a large turnout, and from there, it was evident the local community was very interested in supporting the project.

"Everyone had a really great time," said Hurley, adding when the night was over, no one wanted to leave.

"The energy from it was phenomenal," she said, and after that night, she and others on the committees realized that by "taking away the stuffiness," of a formal dinner and allowing people to mingle around the room, it provided the perfect setting for people to talk to each other.

"Friends are just as important as funds," she said.

In light of the success last year, Hurley and Hoffman decided to take on a second fund raiser this year, on a slightly larger scale. On Saturday, Nov. 1 from 7 p.m. until midnight, the Black Rock Country Club in Hingham will host the event, where guests will enjoy a buffet style dinner, cash bar, and dancing to the tunes of Java Jive. A Rolex watch, donated by Hingham Jewelers, will also be raffled off. The event will be black-tie optional and all proceeds from the evening will go to benefit the Breast Care Center. Tickets are already sold out, and a little more than 300 guests are expected to attend.

Proceeds from the event will go toward helping expand the programs currently offered at the Breast Care Center, which could include hiring more nurse practitioners or purchasing more educational materials, said Michael Rogers, philanthropy officer for the hospital

Because Hingham Jewelers donated a Rolex watch for the event, Hoffman thought raffling it off would be a good way to "generate an additional amount of money" for the center, as well as serve as an alternate from the typical silent auctions many fund raisers hold. Guests will pay $50 for one chance at the Rolex, and will be given a small jewelry sized box, wrapped with a bow. When unwrapped, the box contains the numbers to be drawn for the raffle, and a pink ribbon breast cancer awareness pin.

"For $50, it's nice to get a little something," Hoffman said.

The breast cancer pins were donated by ekdesigns in Cohasset, and all proceeds from the raffle will benefit the Breast Cancer Center as well.

"Breast cancer seems to be one of those rampant things," Hurley said, and Hoffman noted most of the people who will attend this year's function have some sort of affiliation with breast cancer. Whether they are survivors, have had a family member or loved one diagnosed with breast cancer, or just know someone who has been affected in their life from the disease, it is a cause many people want to support and now have a way to participate in the fight.

The planning and construction of the Breast Care Center was part of a $16 million renovations project at the hospital, which included the surgical, maternity, and emergency services portions of the campus. The Breast Care Center, which is located in the Stetson West medical building at West Street and Route 18, held its grand opening in December 2002.

Rogers said he has been very impressed with the way the towns have joined forces and have done all the "heavy lifting," of raising funds for the center.

"These are people in the community who want to make a difference in the community," said Rogers, adding the women who are involved in the town communities are a very diverse group, who have all devoted their time to help the cause. Through their efforts, he believes the Breast Care Center will continue to grow in its ability to provide quality care in the community through its combined local medical teams and city hospital affiliates.

HAPPENINGS

Books, CDs and DVDs are sought

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. is accepting donations of slightly worn hardcover and paperback books, DVD's, CD's and videos for its annual book sale, part of the ecumenical Village Fair that will be held on Saturday, Dec. 6.

If your book shelves are spilling on the floor, and DVD's CD's and videos are busting out of the entertainment center like superman out of a phone booth, the church has got the solution for you. Donations can be brought to the church in bags or boxes and placed inside the parish hall door marked "church offices." Alternatively, the church would be happy to arrange pick up of your donations. For donation pick-up or information, call Alix White at 781-383-1829. Books are sorted at St. Stephen's Church in Walton Rodgers Hall every Monday from 9 a.m. to 12 noon.

The book sale is a mission program of St. Stephen's Church to more strongly establish a church presence in a needy area.

Halloween safety recommendations

The National Confectioners Association has established the following safety tips to help make this Halloween a safe and enjoyable one:

- Wear light-colored clothing that's short enough to prevent tripping and add reflective tape to the sides, front and back of costume.
- Make sure children can see well through face masks, or use cosmetics to create fun or scary faces.
- Adults should accompany young children.
- Go out in daylight and carry a flashlight in case of delay.
- Stay within the neighborhood and only visit homes you know.
- Watch for traffic.
- Only give and accept wrapped or packaged candy.
- Examine all candy before allowing children to eat it.
- Keep costumed children away from pets. The pet may not recognize the child and become frightened.
- Avoid hard plastic or wood props such as daggers or swords. Substitute with foam rubber which is soft and flexible.

Senior housing for Beach Street is on the table

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset has not seen the last of developers filing under the Senior Overlay District just yet, as preliminary plans have already been brought to the table for another affordable senior housing development in town.

Ellen Morrissey, 488 Jerusalem Road, came before the Planning Board to gain feedback for a new project, before moving ahead and submitting more definitive plans. Morrissey has already filed an application with the town to build a 40B project on her 14 acres of land located off Beach Street, but said in light of the new bylaw, she would be willing to change her plans and work with the town to give it a project she thinks everyone will benefit from.

While nothing has been set in stone, Morrissey's proposed 40B project would include 103 units, with 25 percent affordable housing, spread out over three buildings. She expects her new proposal would reduce the number of units by about 40 to 50 percent, leaving roughly 60 units to be spread over two buildings.

Her plans have changed from three to two buildings because she is considering donating a roughly four-acre parcel of land to the town for future use, which is located directly behind Town Hall, and would provide access to Great Brewster Woods.

In addition, Morrissey brought up to Planning Board members she would be interested in learning whether a parcel of land owned by the town might be offered as a swap for the land she would give the town. While the swap is not contingent on

Planners still seek village train station

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's 2003, right? The Board of Selectmen might be checking their calendars this week to make sure the clock hasn't been turned back to the fall of 1996.

That's because the Planning Board is again advocating for a train station in Cohasset Village and has written to Douglas Foy, chief of Commonwealth Development, to say just that. Foy, a member of Gov. Mitt Romey's cabinet, coordinates the departments of housing, transportation and environmental affairs.

The Planning Board wrote to then secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe back in December 1996 backing a village train station after the selectmen voted to kill the concept and opt for the Route 3A site.

The selectmen's action that December followed months of debate over where the station should be located, including a non-binding "straw poll" at the Special Town Meeting that advised the commuter rail station should be on 3A. The vote was 311 in favor of a Route 3A station and 112 in favor of a village station.

Miffed by the Planning Board's letter, selectmen decided to send a letter of their own to Coxe stating why they support the 3A site.

Some cops worry who's next

But Haddad sees no morale problem

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Sources both inside the department and civilians close to the police say Cohasset police officers are walking on eggshells wondering who might next get the ax.

Officers are worried if they make a misstep they, too, might be out the door. They describe the department as a dysfunctional family that is out of control with officers afraid to talk to one another.

Some police are still reeling from the news that two union officers, Sgt. William Quigley and Officer James McLean, are out on paid administrative leave with no reason given. They won't talk publicly for fear of any possible retaliation against them.

But Town Manager Mark Haddad disputes there is a morale problem in the department.

"The officers I talk to are happy," he said. Haddad doesn't think it is hurting the department by not being more forthcoming about why the officers were placed on leave. He also views his actions as fair because the officers are being paid a salary.

Haddad declined further comment but did say he backs "Chief Jackson 100 percent."

Move over coffee lovers – tea is true brew

Expert will leave guests as believers

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Tea has long been a part of the history of New England, with perhaps the most well known tea party in history taking place in Boston. But tea has a history all its own, which may go unnoticed in a time where coffee seems to be the drink of choice.

"I taste all my tea first. If I don't like it, I won't put it up."
— Judy McColgan, Windsor Tea Shop

But Judy McColgan, owner of the Windsor Tea Shop in North Scituate knows more about tea than she ever could have imagined, and through her shop hopes to get interest brewing. In fact, she has taken to giving educational talks and holding tea tastings to familiarize people with all kinds of tea, not just the bag variety typically found in a local supermarket.

McColgan has given lectures at the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs, and will speak at the Cohasset Historical Hedlund also maintains a district office at 66 Sea St., North Weymouth that is accessible Monday through Friday for constituents and appointments with the senator. The telephone number is 781-340-9866 or at the Statehouse 617-722-1646.

Hedlund letter on quad gates

Senator Robert Hedlund has requested a meeting with Secretary of Transportation Daniel Grabauskas, to discuss the possibility of having four-quadrant gates in the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate, and Weymouth along the Greenbush line. In a letter dated Oct. 21, sent to the Cohasset, Hingham, and Scituate Boards of Selectmen, as well as Mayor Madden inWeymouth, Hedlund stated his support for the gates, and acknowledges while they may cost a little more, "I know you are not the type of person to put a bottom line before the safety of our residents. If four-quadrant gates save even one life, it will be a priceless return on our investment."

Hedlund also said while he and Grabauskas "evidently disagree" on whether four-quad gates should be built, he understands there is no disagreement where the safety of commuters and residents are concerned, and while towns have compromised to ask for four-quad gates at only the most warranted grade crossings, the MBTA continues to resist.

Mass Electric outages

Town Manager Mark Haddad sent a letter to Massachusetts Electric regarding the many power outages which have affected residents in the Hillside Drive area of town recently. Account Manager Joe Cardinal responded with a letter, which stated residents in that area have experienced six interruptions in the last 22 months, four of which were related to tree limbs falling on wires, while two were related to a bad fuse on a Beechwood Street pole. The letter also states two of the six events happened on Oct. 15 and were both tree related.

Cardinal said the length of the outages varied, with the shortest being 24 minutes, and one hour 44 minutes for the longest. He said he has asked his arborist to patrol the area to determine if there are any obvious tree problems which could be immediately corrected, adding when either trimming or removing trees, concerns for power outages need to be balanced with concerns for residents' trees being trimmed.

Putting the cost cuffs on police-fire station overrun

Advisors cool to back request

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

If voters at the Nov. 17 Special Town Meeting vote no on allocating an additional $90,000 to cover the cost of renovations made to the police and fire station building, it may be up to a judge to decide how and when the town's contractor gets paid.

While waiting for the Town Meeting vote carries a certain amount of stress, Town Manager Mark Haddad is also worried because the Advisory Committee unanimously voted against recommending the allocation of funds. In an effort to try to change that vote, Haddad, along with Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, Police Chief Robert Jackson, and Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris came before the Advisory Committee again last week, to answer questions and hopefully gain the committee's support.

Haddad thoroughly explained each step of the renovations process and outlined every change order, what it entailed and how much it cost, to help members understand what the process was during the renovations. While he admitted he was "ultimately responsible for everything that happened," during construction because he was the one making final decisions to go ahead with the changes, it became evident throughout the discussion, that had committee members been kept more in the communication loop throughout the project, many questions at this late stage of the project could have been avoided.

However, with the information given by Haddad, the committee also began questioning whether the architect could be at fault for many of the change orders that became necessary throughout the process, and if he should be held accountable. The architectural firm hired for the renovations was Strekalovsky and Hoit, Inc., which is based out of Hingham.

Haddad said one of the major problems during construction was discovered when the roof was taken off and contractors found there was no bond beam to support the building. Bond beams help reinforce the structure of a building and particularly help protect a building against the high winds of a hurricane. Building codes now require bond beams for adequate support, but in 1963 when the police and fire station was originally constructed, that was not the standard.

"They should have known the bond beam wasn't there. It wasn't in the code when the building was built, and whether you can see through the walls or not, they should've known it wouldn't be there," said committee member Roger Hill.

But the bond beam only covers a small portion of the $90,000 Haddad is asking for. He also said once the roof was off the building, other problems crept up, including the fact that the planned height of the roof would not accommodate the new ladder truck the department planned on buying. Haddad said the architect used a detailed drawing to figure how high the roof needed to be, but when the actual truck was on site, it wouldn't fit in the building. Therefore, the roof needed to be raised another two inches to accommodate for the anticipated truck and any other trucks that may be purchased by the department in the future.

While the roof was being raised, Haddad said it made sense to make the garage doors all the same height, instead of two 12-foot, 6-inch doors and three 10-foot doors as had been planned at the outset of construction. By having three of the larger doors, it would eliminate the need for assigned spaces in the garage. In addition, by taking out a large window in the back of the building and adding a door, it would allow for another drive-through bay, and Haddad thought that change made sense as well.

'Colossal screw-up'

While many aesthetic changes were made including painting, new windows, updating hardware and other small items, Haddad said there was one mistake he would classify as a "Colossal screw-up without question," by the architect. When wires were pulled out during construction, the bid specs did not include putting the wires back in place, which obviously needed to be done and was an oversight on the plans. While that is a cost the town would have paid for, Haddad said he thought the cost would have been less originally than the roughly $10,000 the town paid after the fact.

"What responsibility has the architect owned up to?" asked Maureen Jerz, to which Haddad said he has contacted the architect, but hasn't received an answer as of yet.

But even if the architect is responsible for some of the problems during construction, the Advisory Committee still maintains it doesn't feel as if it was kept informed of the changes throughout the entire process. While it participated in the original approval of $800,000 for the project, the majority of its members felt this additional request was being asked out of the blue. If change orders were being made, were other construction changes being sought as an attempt to alleviate costs?

But Haddad said in total, the project was only a little over $30,000 over budget because there was a $71,500 contingency fund set up from the start. He also asked the committee to remember the $90,000 included the addition of a new alerting system, because during the renovations, he made the decision to put the conduits for the system in while the walls were open, rather than have to pay someone to come back and tear them down, put in a system and put them back after construction had already been completed. But in his own defense, he said once the roof was off the building decisions had to be made quickly because the longer construction was held up, the more money it would cost the town in rent for the former Graham Waste building where the fire department was housed.

In the end, the general consensus of the Advisory Committee was that none of the requests seemed unjustifiable, but they wish they would have been more informed along the way. While other boards were kept up to date, the Advisory Committee was not, and in the future, communication should be kept more open.

"Next time, pick up the phone," said James Gilman.

Advisory Committee members did not vote after the meeting, but said they will continue in their discussion of the matter and possibly vote again before Town Meeting. Whatever the committee decides, it will still only be a recommendation to the town, and voters will ultimately cast the deciding vote as to whether the fire and police stations receive the money they need.

Cost of burying wires may show up on utility bills

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The lowest estimated cost Town Manager Mark Haddad has received for the conduits and burying wires together is $900,000. He said roughly $500,000 will go toward installing the conduits and $400,000 will go toward the wiring.

The Board of Selectmen have voted to recommend burying the wires for the downtown area, but questions still remain as to the specifics the process will entail, should voters pass it at town meeting.

If Article 5 on the warrant passes, the town will adopt a bylaw which says anyone who has been granted permission to maintain poles and overhead wires in the downtown area shall remove them immediately, which would leave utilities companies no choice but to use the conduits installed. Anyone found in violation of the bylaw would pay a fine of between $1,000 and $5,000 for each consecutive 15 days of the violation.

The original plan for the downtown wires had been to install the conduits and then deal with the wires at a later date. However, Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said Town Counsel advised the town to proceed like other towns do and adopt a bylaw to protect itself. If a town has conduits but no bylaw to say any other method of running wires is illegal, utilities companies have more control over how the town gets its services than if a bylaw says they must use what the town has provided.

The lowest estimated cost Town Manager Mark Haddad has received for the conduits and burying wires together is $900,000. He said roughly $500,000 will go toward installing the conduits and $400,000 will go toward the wiring. Depending on how much money is left over after streetscape options are decided on, Selectmen will determine how much money the town can contribute to the undergrounding. If residents vote at Town Meeting to have concrete as the sidewalk material, there will be roughly $200,000 to contribute to the undergrounding, leaving the total cost to be covered at $700,000. However, if voters choose brick, there will be no money left for the town to contribute and the entire $900,000 will have to be covered by a surcharge on utilities bills and private donations.

Because Selectmen had many questions pertaining to the charges residents could see from utilities companies when putting the wires into the conduits, Haddad met with representatives from Mass Electric and Verizon to iron out the issues.

Haddad said both companies agreed to charge no more than a 2 percent surcharge on utilities bills. The charge for each individual home will vary, depending on the total cost of the individual bill. The duration of the surcharge will depend on how much money the town owes the companies, which will be a result of how much money the town can afford to contribute up front.

The burying of the wires is all part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project, which has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for through grants and private donations.

A surcharge would apply to everyone in town who uses the utilities, including town buildings. Haddad said he will also be in touch with local cable-TV companies.

Pumpkin Patch a huge success

Selectmen Tom Callahan publicly thanked the town for their support during the Appalachia Service Project Pumpkin Patch fund raiser. He said more than $20,000 worth of pumpkins were sold and it was such a success residents will most likely see Wheelwright Park transformed again next year.

Beach talk held

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she and Town Manager Mark Haddad met with Sandy Beach Association president Robin Lawrence to discuss ongoing problems with the beach which came up over the summer months. McMorris said Lawrence was given names of concerned individuals and another meeting will be held in the spring to come up with solutions before beach season starts up again.

Senior housing for Beach St. is on the table

her plans to donate her parcel, it is a piece of property which is under an acre and not buildable as far as she knows. She said the title has been cleared for the parcel and could be used as an alternate entrance to her property.

While access to the property has been an issue of contention for Morrissey in the past, she insists there is no problem, and she in fact has three ways on to her property, two of which she owns. Because her property was tied up in what she describes as "frivolous lawsuits," her plans have not formally been able to come before the Zoning Board of Appeals, but from the feedback she has heard from some Planning Board members, they think the idea of senior housing on her property is a good one. She said the lawsuits have been resolved and she is eager to move forward with her new project.

Plans have been approved for an on-site sewer system, so the project would not be looking for a town connection, and because it would be all senior housing, there would be no impact on the school system, Morrissey said.

There would be three floors of one level units, and a parking garage located in the basement level. Elevators would take residents up to their units, which would all have two bedrooms. It is expected there will be between 1,000 to 2,700 square feet of living space, Morrissey said.

"I think it could be a great lifestyle," she said, adding the property has a great location near the downtown area, which will soon include access to public transportation, and has easy access to the ocean.

Morrissey said she will be putting this new application before the town very shortly, and changes can be negotiated to help provide something the town needs. She said she thinks the Overlay Bylaw is a great way for the town to meet housing requirements and "I applaud Cohasset on its strengths," in recognizing how beneficial the bylaw would be and making it happen.

Village train station sought

MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said without an endorsement by selectmen, it is highly unlikely the train station site would be moved at this late date.

"We have a mitigation agreement with the town that is predicated on the station being built where we said," he explained. "At this point in the game it is not likely we will reconsider the location of the station."

Pesaturo also said the land acquisitions have already taken place.

However, he did say if the selectmen had changed their minds about the location of the station, "we would like to discuss it."

Greenbush is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project and runs 17 miles from Weymouth to Scituate's Greenbush neighborhood. Romney recently gave the go-ahead to resume construction on the rail line after his administration reviewed the economic feasibility of the project, a process that took about seven months.

But Town Manager Mark Haddad said selectmen have not changed their minds and were not in favor of moving the station.

The Planning Board said the 3A station is in direct conflict with several of the "Principles of Enhancing Our Commonwealth," issued by Foy's office including supporting the revitalization of town centers and creating walkable districts and increasing job opportunities.

The board noted the draft of the Cohasset Master Plan says it is unlikely Greenbush would provide a major direct economic stimulus because it is not near existing residential neighborhoods or places of employment that would provide retail demand outside of peak commuting hours.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore stated in his Oct. 28 letter to Foy, "The train station will bring scores of commuters and, likely, spouses into the downtown in the morning and evening hours, folks that will patronize the card shop, deli, hardware store, bank and other local businesses."

The letter enumerated several other benefits of a village station including elimination of the sharpest curve in the Greenbush project; increased ridership; commuters being able to walk to the station; no bottleneck of "one way in/one way out" because the downtown is served by a number of feeder roads, among other benefits.

Negatives of the 3A station include, further impacting the level of safety at several 3A intersections; close proximity to the Nantasket Junction Station in Hingham; lack of sidewalks and pedestrian and bicycle access to the station; and lack of residential neighborhoods in close proximity.

"This board is ready to assist your office in facilitating the further discussion of this topic or in providing any relevant materials you may require," Moore stated. "Given the aggressive schedule of the Greenbush project, we kindly request this matter be reviewed as soon as possible."

Although Police Chief Robert Jackson is forthcoming with the Mariner regarding other police matters, he repeatedly declines to comment on the case involving the officers and the current morale of the department. He said he doesn't want to comment on any aspects of the case because it "isn't prudent to do so at this time."

But nevertheless, Haddad's action is raising questions about leadership, nepotism and unfair labor practices in the police department.

There is also growing concern around town about the cost to the taxpayers of filling overtime shifts. With Brian Curran's resignation a month ago, the department is now down three officers. Although some shifts that normally have four officers can be filled with three, there may be vacation and sick days that also need to be filled. At full force not including the chief, there are 13 patrolmen and five sergeants, including a detective and a detective sergeant. Those numbers are now down to a total of 15, four sergeants and 11 patrolmen.

Haddad said he did not have the overtime numbers ready and did not plan to discuss them with Selectmen at their meeting Tuesday night.

Two-and-on-half weeks ago when Haddad put the officers on leave, he also fired Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy the same day.

Murphy is alleged to have made disparaging remarks around town about the way the department is run, although Haddad said he was let go due to "complaints."

International Brotherhood of Police Officers sources say, McLean admonished then Officer Curran, the chief's son-in-law, with a written letter on union letterhead to Haddad for not following proper grievance procedures relative to an overtime grievance. Eighteen hours later McLean was called into the chief's office and fired from his job as fleet manager, a collateral duty, a source at the IBPO said. McLean contacted IBPO national which resulted in a meeting between IBPO lawyers, Haddad, and the chief over a possible suit involving unfair labor practices.

McLean also complained after another officer returned from vacation and allegedly showed off a nude photo of himself at the station.

Quigley arrested Chief Jackson's son, Keith Jackson, and two other men, who allegedly had been drinking and who were wrestling, outside the Legion Hall at 10:30 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 11., where Keith Jackson and the chief are both members. In an unusual move, after receiving a letter from the Legion that the handicapped railing was damaged before the incident, the Cohasset Police Prosecutor Rick Grassie didn't sign the complaint at court and the men were never arraigned on charges of affray, disorderly conduct or malicious destruction or property.

Quigley was also on duty the afternoon Keith Jackson's former girlfriend and her father came to the police station alleging Keith Jackson had hit her on multiple occasions, once outside the Legion. That case is still before the court and Quigley is expected to testify, although it is unclear what impact his "on leave" status would have on his credibility.

Although there was a warrant issued and an internal arrest number given, Keith Jackson's name, address and domestic violence charges did not appear in the police log which the Mariner publishes. Chief Jackson told the Mariner at the time his son was involved in a domestic incident but the paper did not pursue it because there was no arrest noted.

Last week Jackson said the entry did not appear in the log because his son turned himself in at Quincy District Court and was not in fact, arrested. However, the log record shows the entry was modified by "R. Jackson" to state booking procedure.

According to the state Ethics Commission, public officials are prohibited from even giving the impression of preferential treatment to members of their immediate family, a charge some are making behind the scenes regarding the chief.

However, Haddad has said emphatically that the cases involving the two suspended officers have nothing to do with their relationship to Chief Jackson or his family.

Tax bills due, OK to pay online

Fiscal Year 2004's second-quarter tax bills were due Nov. 3. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4114 to confirm their correct mailing address or the Treasurer-Collector at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

The Town of Cohasset now offers residents the option of paying their real estate tax bills via the Internet. The eBill system takes the town's billing data and posts it on the Metropolitan Communications (MCC) Web site, which allows residents to view and pay their real estate tax bills. At 25-cents-per-transaction, the new payment option costs residents less than a postage stamp.

Residents can arrange for bill payments to be automatically withdrawn from their checking or savings account, and eBill will be accepting credit card payments shortly.

Currently, residents are able to pay their real estate tax bills with eBill. Next month, residents will also be able to pay motor vehicle excise taxes and water/sewer bills using the eBill system.

To find out more information, or to make a payment, please visit the eBill web site at www.mcc.net.

No sewer connection for Cedarmere project

But developer won't give up

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

No amount of testimony on behalf of the Cedarmere development team could convince the Sewer Commission the project should be allowed access to the town's sewer lines. Armed with lawyers, engineering consultants, and an argument they were behind 100 percent, a hopeful Cedarmere team left empty handed.

Based on the facts that the team said they have a valid permit, there is capacity in the system, and no prior legal claims to the sewer have been made, members went into the meeting very optimistic they would leave with permission to tie their project in. In addition, a report written by their engineering consultant, Meredith Zona, vice president of Fay, Spofford & Thorndike, whose firm helped in the design of the plant, said capacity was available, and Cedarmere would not have any negative impacts on the town's system.

But the Sewer Commission was taking the recommendation of its consultant very seriously, who had reviewed the report submitted by Zona and had a much different take on the situation than what her report entailed.

Daniel Coughlin, Senior Associate for Tutela Engineering Associates Inc., the town's consultant, said in his report, "It is our opinion that excess capacity at the Cohasset WWTP is not adequately demonstrated by the submissions; and on that basis, we would recommend denial of the application at this time. Reconsideration several years in the future may be an option, if acclimated flows are less than currently anticipated."

In the Cedarmere report, Zona presented graphs outlining the average daily flow and average daily organic loading for the 2002 calendar year. Based on her report, the town would be able to take its current average flow of 644 connections, add the 773 connections which would complete the hook up of the downtown area, tie in Little Harbor, Atlantic Avenue, Jerusalem Road Extension, Old Coach Road, and 60 units of senior housing on the proposed Cook Estate property, and the Cedarmere development, and would total a capacity of 450,000 gallons per day.

David Calhoun said the plant is currently working at a 300,000 gallon per day, and was designed to handle 400,000. He said his team would pay to upgrade the plant's cassettes, which would expand the town's sewer capacity to roughly 450,000 gallons, which would accommodate for all other planned hook ups, and the town could "take [the cassettes] for a test drive," for roughly a year until Cedarmere gets to a point where it could begin to connect. He said even after that year, before the development comes on line, if the town doesn't get the result it was hoping for, the team would be willing to upgrade the cassettes again and expand capacity further.

In her professional opinion, Zona states, "Based on our analysis of projected flows and loadings and recent plant performance data, we believe the upgraded Cohasset WWTF will easily accommodate the wastewater flow and organic loading (BOD) that the Cedarmere project will generate."

Conflicting report

But not only did Couglin of Tutela's report say there is not enough capacity, it stated the amount of data collected by Zona was not sufficient. He states the figures given by Zona deal exclusively with the 2002 calendar year, "which represented a period during which there was a significant flux in the number of sewer connections." He added there were sill many homes yet to be connected in the Central Sewer District, of which Cedarmere is not a part. After updating the charts done by Zona to include information through September 2003, he found the average flow was increasing dramatically and will probably continue to do so, if the current trends keep moving forward as they have been.

His recommendation was to wait for the system users to become acclimated to using the system before placing added stress on it.

Sewer Commission Chairman Ray Kasperowicz said after hearing both presentations, the town's was very conservative and Cedarmere's was very optimistic, adding "Either one could be somewhat right," but still wanted to have the data from years of monitoring the plant before he would feel comfortable making a decision in favor of Cedarmere. He said in this case, he would have to take a conservative approach because the risk wouldn't be worth taking.

"As far as I'm concerned, I'm ready to vote on this tonight," he said, adding while he loves the project, from a timing standpoint, it won't work.

However, Calhoun had timing issues of his own and said he couldn't believe after submitting materials to Tutela, including reports from Fay, Spofford, and Thorndike, letters from attorneys, and an application for sewer, dated Sept. 5, he did not receive a response from Tutela until late afternoon of the day they were slated to come before the commission.

"That's not fair and it's unprofessional," he said, adding his tax dollars were paying for the report to be looked over by the town's consultant, and "Any taxpayer should scream, and I'm about to."

Sewer Commissioner John Beck said he too was not convinced adequate capacity to accommodate for Cedarmere does not exist, and would like to have more information. "Personally I'm not convinced they know everything they need to know about that plant," he said.

But the Cedarmere team insisted there is capacity now, because the town is only using 300,000 of the 400,000 current total capacity. "You're not using what you've got," Calhoun said. In addition, the team said it has previous court cases which will back them up, and that reserving capacity for future developments is illegal.

But Kasperowicz said because Little Harbor has been deemed a priority by the Department of Environmental Protection, and is caught up in a legal judgement by the state, it becomes a special case which has to be taken care of because the state has ruled on it.

He said he thinks the pollution of Little Harbor may be a problem the town can only solve through sewer, and he doesn't want to commit to another project, "When our heads are still in the guillotine."

But developer David Calhoun said, "The Little Harbor sham is about to end," adding there is no money for that area of town to hook up, and won't be in the near future, so it shouldn't even be a consideration.

"That judgement needs to be adhered to," Kasperowicz said, adding the town would be taking a risk if it hooked up Cedarmere before Little Harbor, because the plant might not be able to handle the added capacity, which could spur on a whole new round of legal battles, bringing on "the state's wrath for another 20 years."

But whether the issue of capacity is argued or not, Kasperowicz noted Cedarmere is located outside the Central Sewer District, and said "I would feel I was performing my job negligently if I let someone new in, from outside the district," he said, adding he would feel much better if the town had more time to study the plant and new hook ups, and could "establish a baseline, then we can look outside to other applications."

Kasperowicz was ready to put the issue to a vote, when Robert Tuchmann, attorney for the developers, came forward. He said if the Commission would be willing to hold off on a vote, perhaps an impartial third party would be able to come forward and take a look at both engineering reports and the project could move forward from there.

"There will be another decision, but it will come from a judge," he said, asking whether it is worth it to go that route, or does it make more sense to let the Cedarmere team come before the Commission again and avoid a potential court battle.

Tuchmann also asked if the Commission is basing its decision mainly on the view of its consultant, to which Kasperowicz said they had also been in touch with Town Counsel on the matter. Sullivan asked again if it would be "cheaper in the long run to refer to another organization and be bound by that decision," or have the courts decide.

While Kasperowicz and Beck were ready to vote no on the issue, Cunning was the lone Cedarmere supporter on the Commission.

"I've seen the site and it's exactly what the town is looking for. It's a shame it has to come to the sewer to say whether this is going forward or not," Cunning said. However, because Cunning is an insurance agent and the Cedarmere developers had a small policy through him, he was advised by Town Counsel not to vote on the matter because if there was a chance he could make a profit in the future from the project's going through, he should abstain. However, because the policy was so small and he only made a total of $380 from it, he said if it had come down to his vote being the deciding factor, he would have written a check for the $380 and given the money back, because it's not worth it to keep a multi-million dollar project from going forward.

Cedarmere is being proposed under the town's new Senior Overlay District Bylaw, which requires a special permit from the Planning Board. The bylaw, which permits higher-density housing than would otherwise be allowed, requires the development include a percentage of affordable housing. It also requires those units be "counted" by the state Department of Housing and Community Development as part of the town's affordable housing inventory. It is the first project in town to file under the new bylaw.

Before a vote was taken, Cunning said he wondered if all options had been looked at, and whether some sort of arrangement with the town of Hull could be made. He suggested possibly setting up a safety net by putting money in and Escrow account that would let Cedarmere tie in now, and the money would be there should other homes need to hook up to Hull's capacity in the future. He also said he would be willing to let the team come back and discuss the matter further in the future.

But Cunning's suggestion was not enough to hold the vote off, and was denied by Kasperowicz and Beck.

Calhoun then asked the Commission if there were any other projects before them at that time, to which Kasperowicz said no.

"There will be a new application filed in the morning," Calhoun said.

Fence talks held

Town Manager Mark Haddad said after speaking with George Roukounakis, owner of Olympic Citco, 55 South Main St., he has verbally agreed hold off installing a fence in the middle of James Lane.

While the Zoning Board of Appeals has decided to overturn the Building Commissioner's denial of a permit for Roukounakis to install a fence on his property, Haddad has been discussion the matter with Selectmen to see if an appeal can be filed. He believes the ZBA may have caused a severe public safety hazard by allowing a fence to be installed in the middle of a roadway.

Haddad thinks because the Red Lion Inn is encroaching on James Lane, the issue will have to be resolved on that end before a fence can be constructed.

"I will continue to work with him and Town Counsel to see if we can work it out that way," Haddad said.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

The gang that couldn't shoot straight?

Something doesn't seem right at the Cohasset Police Department. Officers are privately saying they are tip-toeing around and are worried they might be next to get the ax while realizing they may have no one to turn to in a leadership position either at the police department or Town Hall.

They're worried because they don't understand why two of their fellow officers have been placed on paid administrative leave pending the results of an investigation that appears on the surface to some to be a witch hunt to trump up charges to get the men the heck out of Dodge.

Caught up in the tangled web are two young, veteran officers Sgt. William Quigley and Officer James McLean, who are anxious to know what the charges are so they can address them. But officials are mum on the matter, saying it may take up to a month before even the officers, whose careers may be in jeopardy, will know. In the meantime, the men — who are both officers in the police union — are the subjects of a rumor mill that is taking on the form of character assassination alleging the officers are unfit for duty.

From where we sit, we've had enough corroboration from multiple sources — including civilians, close to the department — to question the validity of the paid suspension.

We are also being told the police department is in disarray. Even if half of what we've heard is true, it's enough to call for an independent investigation.

So what could Quigley and McLean have done to be singled out?

Both men seem to have crossed paths with members of Chief Robert Jackson's family, sources say.

Quigley, who is union president, arrested the chief's son, Keith Jackson and took the report from his former girlfriend at the police station where she went with her father alleging Keith Jackson had hit her on multiple occasions.

McLean, also a union officer, admonished the Chief's son-on-law, former Officer Brian Curran, for not following union procedures in filing an overtime grievance. In apparent retaliation, McLean was stripped of his job as fleet manager, according to a source at the IBPO.

The police are sworn to serve and protect but their ability to carry out their duties is coming into question. In the meantime, taxpayers are footing the bill which will amount to thousands of dollars.

There may be more than a few Cohasseters out there that remember the 1977 Boston Magazine article likening Cohasset police as "the gang that couldn't shoot straight" and enumerated problems in a small-town department.

In those days few if any Cohasset officers had formal training and those that did used Cohasset as a stepping stone to go elsewhere. Officers even bought their own ammunition and equipment.

As the article quoted one cop, "As soon as a guy gets his academy training, he transfers to another force and gets the hell out of this town. Can you blame him?"

This is no longer the 1970s, and while Cohasset is still a small town, today it is a sophisticated place and is not an oasis that is immune to serious crime. Sadly, what's going on now is undermining a department that has worked for a generation to become more professional and dispel that image painted by Boston Magazine.

Town Manager Mark Haddad needs to call for an independent consultant to come in — someone with no political ties or agenda — to examine the department and to come up with a plan for changes that would be enacted.

And the two officers deserve to know what they are facing, so they can address it, or they should be allowed to come back to work.

Cook estate: a golden opportunity

TO THE EDITOR:

Article 4 on the warrant for the Town Meeting Nov. 17 is the result of thoughtful study and much effort by a group of responsible citizens, and deserves an affirmative vote. A recent letter suggests that we will have enough senior housing if other developments go forward, but even if Cedarmere and Avalon come into existence, there will remain a serious shortage of senior housing at both "market" and "affordable" prices.

Blending the Cook estate with adjacent town property (otherwise unusable because of access problems) is a golden, one-time opportunity to add about 87 units to our stock of "market priced' and "affordable" senior housing (though still not enough). The nickel-nursers among us can take comfort that the insignificant cost to the taxpayers is recovered if the project goes forward! The neighbors can take comfort in realizing that this is better than a development over which the Town would have far less input control. And seniors tired of yard word but wishing to stay here can have hope!

The representatives of the Cook estate have been co-operative and generous in agreeing to a method to assist the town while complying with the strictures of the estate trustees. The Town's ownership of the real estate would be transitory, being transferred to a developer from the Town concurrently with the transfer from the Cook estate to the Town, so that the funding comes from the developer, not from the Town. The Request for Proposal (provided to potential bidding developers) would include requirements that are much more specific than could be imposed by our regulatory bodies on developers who had purchased their real estate in the normal way, but of course the regulatory bodies would retain their normal oversight authority. The RFP would stipulate a minimum bid that would cover the price asked by the Cook estate plus a value placed on the town property plus the Town's legal and consulting costs.

If Cohasset fails to take advantage of this unique opportunity, the Cook estate will be sold to someone else, probably to a developer over whom we will have far less control than is provided by this proposal, and with far less amelioration of our pressing need for more senior housing.

We have until mid 2004 (assuming an affirmative vote on article 4) to effect the transfer of the real estate to a developer who meets our requirements, after which time the Cook estate may sell to another developer. We would not, of course, recover the consulting costs incurred in working up the concept, and would have lost the opportunity to add about 87 units of "affordable" and "market priced" senior housing., most of which would become the homes of current or future Cohasset residents.

A recent letter opposes the concept on the grounds that tax money is being spent on consultants etc. Well, there are few of our problems that can be addressed without some cost. Relying on other developments to solve our senior housing needs may cost little, nor does it effectively address the need. It would be penny wise and pound foolish not to proceed on the grounds that we have to risk a few dollars on preparation, dollars that should be recovered if it goes forward.

Just a few months ago, a very large area was added to our stock of land to be preserved in its natural state. So surely we can allow a mere 8.715 acres of town land to be used to help satisfy the pressing need for more senior and affordable housing (a need that eventually must be satisfied somehow).

A few years ago, the Town flubbed an opportunity to buy the former Cox estate (now occupied by the Roys and worth many millions of dollars) for less than a million, on the grounds that we couldn't afford to lose that tax base! Let's not make a similar mistake, but take the long and realistic view.

Taxpayers beware! at the Nov. 17 STM

TO THE EDITOR:

The upcoming Special Town Meeting reminds me of a sign I recently saw that read: "More is Never Enough".

Right at the start between two articles we are asked to come up with close to $1/2 million to balance the current budget. Remember the powers that be asked us for a $350K override in the spring to balance the budget. Well we all know that wasn't really all they wanted back then, but it was the number they came up with that would 'sell' with the voters.

Please note, these amounts do not cover the $260K the schools need to meet their utility bills. It seems that the building contractor notified the schools before the March Town Meeting that their utility bills would be $300K more when the renovations were complete and for reasons unknown the school kept that figure from the rest of the town until just recently. Remember when the new Osgood came on line, its utilities more than tripled. During the last few years interested citizens have offered alternatives for energy conservation and reducing costs that were rejected by the building committee and superintendent.

A really big ticket item is the $4.5 million for the purchase of the Cook Estate for a 55-plus housing development. The current plan is for 87 units — 45 pricey condominiums plus 42 apartments, 14 of which to be earmarked for those in the 80 percent of median income range. The entire development will not count for the senior overlay district or for affordable housing. But do we really need 87 more housing units in town between the elementary school campus and Stop & Shop when the ZBA just approved the 200-unit Avalon Estate apartments which will give us affordable and Section 8 housing and supposedly meet our 40B requirements. Of course the main argument for buying the Cook estate is so the town will be able to control the type of housing and prevent it from being mansionized. It is true that 10 mansions will not bring in the congestion or the $400K in real estate taxes that is projected from the 87 units

The real twist in the Cook plan is that the town would like to find a developer to buy the land and do the project and is throwing in close to 10 acres of town land to sweeten the deal. The town land earmarked for development is in the Peppermint Brook vicinity where Water Commissioner John McNabb wants the town to buy more land. So, we can "give away" some land with one hand and "buy" other land with the other hand. Interesting way of doing business.

But what would a town meeting be without buying equipment. After getting one school bus at the March Town Meeting, the School Committee now wants two more. It was pointed out in March that there was enough "cash" in the taxpayer subsidized school babysitting revolving account to pay for a bus, but the school still wants to hang onto that "cash" and hit up the taxpayers for more. But that is not surprising considering that even in these tough times, the School Committee saw fit to give our outgoing super a hefty 6percent raise and 3percent to the business manager after $50K was lost in the last two years in the lunch program

And of course we need a new $800K ladder truck to go into the renovated fire station that is looking for another $90K over the $800K that the renovation was supposed to cost. Some residents are wondering why the taxpayers have to pay for an architect's miscalculation in the height of the building.

We all know that no is never no in Cohasset. After voters turned down paying outright for burying the wires downtown, the new scheme is Article 5. This is a bylaw change for said "Underground Utility Conversion" whereby each utility company's permission, license and authority is revoked from constructing or maintaining poles and associated overhead structures and they must be removed immediately from the downtown area. The direct cost of said work will be covered by an amount of not less than 2 percent of gross revenues from charges to its customers over a nine-year period. Translated that means that all utility companies involved will be increasing their rates to Cohasset customers for a nine-year period and then we have to trust that after that time the added expense will disappear.

This is just a brief overview of what will be happening at the Special Town meeting on Monday, Nov. 17. If you want your voice heard about the future amounts on your tax bill and how our town will be changing, I suggest that you make every effort to attend.

HEALTH NOTES

Rails with Trails concept keeps on trekking despite some obstacles

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In September, Health Notes had an article telling about Cohasset's Rails with Trails (RwT) initiative. Last week another Mariner article appeared citing progress to date. The article accurately reported that the MBTA was "not on board" with the RwT concept.

Nevertheless, the Board felt that it's important to the Town to continue with the feasibility evaluation, since we seek a broader benefit than just a trail along the MBTA right of way. So, on Tuesday this week, Joe Godzik and I visited the MBTA with Paul Smith, Alta Planning & Design contractor doing the RwT feasibility report, and Kristina Patterson, Ombudsman for the Town on the MBTA Greenbush project, to discuss the specific nature of the objections. We met with Joe Nolan, MBTA executive coordinator, and Eric Flemming, deputy program manager, DJM Harris, the MBTA's consultant, and Tom Carroll, community outreach director, with Cashman, which is building the train.

The first thing we learned, is that some elements of the BoH's dream of a broader pedestrian communication with important features in the towns open spaces are already being planned and will be implemented as a part of the MBTA's construction program. For example, the MBTA as a part of it's remediation program will be creating a trail from the train station to Wompatuck park and Turkey Hill by converting an old spur on the former rail bed to a pedestrian and bike trail. Other features are good pedestrian transit at crossings, and sidewalks in the downtown area, particularly Beechwood Street to North Main Street.

These are competent and reasonable people and will listen and make judgments based on their experience.

The second thing learned is that the MBTA's priorities, both appropriate and rational, are to avoid delays and extra cost by bringing the project in on time and within budget. Finally, the MBTA's operating staff have a dedication to avoiding accidents and harm to those near its rail bed. Accordingly, they have a commitment from long practice and experience that it is best to keep people as far away from the tracks as necessary for safety. Hence their reluctance to grant permission for people to walk in places near the right of way. Nevertheless, these are competent and reasonable people, and therefore they are, if not enthusiastic about nearby walking paths, at least reasonable, and will listen and make judgments based on their experience.

A most important issue discussed at some length was the integrity of conservation lands. Both parties, the RwT people and the MBTA, are sensitive to the need not to disturb wetlands and environmentally sensitive areas. But the rails run in wetlands. Just as town dumps are often in swamps. It must be remembered, however, that as a young country, when we gave rights of way to rail companies and waste disposal businesses, we thought we were giving away swamps, unplantable till and waste land which could be used for no other purpose. It's now up to us to resolve these opposing viewpoints to suit everyone.

A report which will be prepared and, hopefully will be presented at the spring Town Meeting will give us much information about how to enhance pedestrian connectivity and communication between important places in Town. And the RwT concept is far from dead.

Classroom odors

On Friday last week, Joe Godzik informed me that an odor had been detected in one of the classrooms at the Joseph Osgood School. The Board had been notified and we learned that the classroom with the odor was being inspected by a school service contractor who reported possible mold spores. Students from the classroom were moved to another room where lessons continued while the source of the odor was investigated.

Upon removal of part of the wall, it was found that the wall was open to the outside where, during the recent rains, water had leaked into a void and saturated some of the wall material. Tests were taken for mold spores from the wall material, and the room was closed until test results are obtained and repairs are completed. This is an example of the frequent and cooperative interaction between the Board of Health, the school staff and other responsible personnel. This interaction generally goes on with little fuss, but you should know that it is only one of the ways your children are being protected and supported by the Town's personnel.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Selected paintings by Cohasset artist JoAnne Chittick will be exhibited at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library from Nov. 5 through Dec. 31.

The subjects of these luminous, colorful watercolors include familiar South Shore coastal scenes, still life arrangements, flowers, and a variety of boats. In her paintings, Ms. Chittick depicts the effect of light on form, as it defines shapes and creates interesting patterns. She conveys her own sense of a subject through suggestion and impression as well as careful rendering. Ms. Chittick is a Gallery Artist of the South Shore Art Center and the Cambridge Art Association. Her work has been shown in numerous solo and juried exhibitions in the Boston and South Shore area and is represented in many private collections.

An Opening Reception for the exhibit will be held on Sunday, Nov. 16, from 5 to 7 p.m.

Out with the snollygosters

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I am told that the 11th edition of Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary has hit the stands and, if I read the publicity blurbs right, I'll be labeled an old fuddy-duddy if I ever use the word "snollygoster" again.

That's one of the old favorites that have stood us so well over the years that are now being dropped from the Collegiate to make way for more modern terms like "dead presidents" and "I was aware that the folks at Merriam-Webster added words to the dictionary and published them every 10 years or so but I did not know that they also pruned their product of words no long in use.

I suppose "snollygoster" was hot stuff back in the days when campaigning politicians called each other "mugwumps" (a word that's still in the dictionary) and debated the gold standard.

Luckily, I had a copy of the 10th edition of Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary at hand to look up "snollygoster" and discover it means (or meant) "a shrewd, unprincipled person, especially a politician."

And a "mugwump" is a politician who can't make up his mind, one who sits on the fence "with his mug on one side and his wump on the other."

It's comforting to know that "snollygosters" have left the political scene and we have only the "mugwumps" to contend with at election time, isn't it?

Another word that bit the dust in the 11th edition of the Collegiate is "ten-cent store." Remember when Woolworth's was the Five-and-Ten? Five left long ago, a sign of the times. Can 25-cents be far behind?

"Record changer" is out, too, and "long play," which shows you how fast things move in the record industry. It was only yesterday that we were talking about 75s and cactus needles and changing records by hand.

The 11th edition swarms with new words — 10,000 of them to be exact, most of them coming from the streets, the laboratories or the Internet.

"Dead presidents," of course, is slang for paper money, namely the one dollar Washington, the five dollar Lincoln and the 20 dollar Jackson. I understand there are larger denominations but I've never seen one.

"Frankenfood" is that which has been cloned or genetically engineered — the Frankenstein of food products, get it? Needless to say, this is a term used by its detractors.

There is also "McJob," describing work that doesn't pay a lot of money, which I suppose comes from flipping hamburgers at McDonald's where everything is "Mc" including Ronald.

I can think of a number of words that could stand being stricken from the 12th edition of the Collegiate.

One of my high school teachers, I think it was Miss Waldron, couldn't stand the word "elegant." Only a daring student would use the word in a sentence and watch smoke come from her ears.

Myself, somewhere along the line I've picked up an intense dislike for the word "mellifluous." At least, I think it's spelled that way. That's one word I'm not going to look up.

And, while they're at it, the folks who put together the 12th edition might give some thought to restoring the Old English word "swiving." No, I'm not going to define that, either. This is a family newspaper.

Taking steps to insure your lawn is green in the spring

GREEN THUMBS UP

SUZANNE MAHLER

Weary from hours of raking, chopping, trimming and hauling, I paused for a few moments to soak in the sun's warmth and savor the sights and sounds of a glorious autumn afternoon. Overhead the familiar high-pitched whistles and twittering of a small flock of cedar waxwings could be heard. As they drew near these gregarious, crested, avian visitors swooped down in unison to roost among the branches of my Zumi crabapple tree laden with clusters of bright red berries. Moments later, they were joined by an equally vocal gathering of robins. During the next few weeks, they will systematically devour the multitude of shiny fruits as finches, cardinals, bluebirds, flickers, and mockingbirds join the feeding frenzy.

The mild temperatures and balmy breezes of an Indian summer day prompted a renewed enthusiasm for gardening. Although the warmth was destined to be fleeting, weeding, planting, and cultivating seemed appropriate during this momentary flashback to summertime. I wandered from garden to garden, planting bulbs and squeezing perennials into tight spaces unfit for them to prosper, knowing they would most likely have to be moved next season. Squirrels and blue jays seemed to share my excitement as they scurried about burying nuts and seeds for future consumption. The majority of these secret-hiding places are likely to be forgotten during the upcoming months and there are sure to be innumerable sunflower sprouts and miniature oak trees when the warmth of spring initiates new growth.

By November, even the most passionate gardeners finally develop a sense of urgency as our innate desire to hibernate compels us to accept that the growing season has finally come to an end. The time has come to put the gardens to bed and begin our preparations for the holiday season. Our lawns require only an occasional mowing until the grass eventually stops growing later this month. Mower blades should be gradually lowered from midsummer heights to approximately two inches by your last mowing. An application of lime at any time during the fall is beneficial and early November is an ideal time to spread a winterizer fertilizer to promote a healthy root system and an early greening of the lawn next spring.

Before this final ritual can be performed, however, it may be necessary to participate in another rite of autumn, the raking of copious quantities of leaves. Scattered frosts, brisk breezes and intermittent rainfall have undressed many of our trees and shrubs. For some, raking fallen leaves is an endless chore, but for the experienced gardener, the gathering of autumn foliage is a valued activity providing a multitude of benefits. Many of us actually enjoy the physical labor involved in vigorously raking. In addition, the accumulated leaves may be used as a winter mulch, a beneficial additive to the compost pile, or as a soil conditioner.

Every effort should be made to rake drifting autumn leaves frequently until all our deciduous trees have shed their foliage. While many gardeners view this leafy covering as Mother Nature's way of providing a protective, cozy winter mulch, a prolonged accumulation of leaves can actually be detrimental to many plants. The broad leaves of maples and even the smaller leaves of cherry, birch and a wide variety of shrubs are likely to mat together when they become wet. The presence of a dense layer of damp leaves can quickly suffocate underlying grass or plants and reduces air circulation around the base of shrubs which may eventually promote diseases in addition to providing an ideal refuge for foraging rodents and voracious slugs and snails. Instead, the leaves that have been collected can be selectively put to use.

To use most leaves to their best advantage, shred them with a lawn mower or "leaf-eating" device. This will help them to decompose more rapidly when composted or turned into the garden and they are less likely to blow away should they be used as an organic winter mulch in the perennial border.

Compost is a gardener's black gold and autumn leaves are a valuable ingredient in its composition. A mixture of shredded leaves, weeds, manure, and chopped debris from the perennial gardens produces a rich, dark organic blend. By next season, this glorious mixture will be ready and serve as an ideal additive for new beds, depleted soils and planting trees, shrubs and perennials.

An inch or two of shredded leaves could also be spread directly around perennial plants as a winter mulch after the borders have been trimmed and raked, although care should be taken not to bury crowns or cover evergreen rosettes or foliage. As the winter progresses, the shredded leaf mulch will gradually decompose and work its way into the soil during freeze/thaw cycles providing valuable organic material. Similarly, new beds or vegetable gardens will profit from the addition of several inches of shredded leaves, which can be turned in to improve drainage, moisture and nutrient retention, worm populations, and an overall enhancement of the soil. When spring arrives, soils will be ready for early planting.

It was pitch black outdoors before I reluctantly abandoned my gardens, desperately clinging to what might well be the last remnants of summertime. One large island bed was neat and tidy, raked, weeded, mulched and ready for winter. Perhaps Mother Nature will delay her wintry offerings this year and all the gardens will be properly put to bed before the snow flies.

A few fall lawn tips

- Mower blades should be gradually lowered from midsummer heights to about two inches by your last mowing.
- Rake autumn leaves frequently until all our deciduous trees have shed their foliage.
- Leaves may be used as a winter mulch, a beneficial additive to the compost pile, or as a soil conditioner.
- Early November is an ideal time to spread a winterizer fertilizer on your lawn.

Economic stimulus plan is no silver bullet, lawmakers say

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL LEVENSON

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Reviving the economy is like trying to kill a werewolf, Senate President Robert Travaglini said. "There is no silver bullet to solve our economic problems," he said, in announcing that the Senate would do what it could by passing a $115 economic stimulus plan that includes housing, tax policy, and worker training proposals. Travaglini found an apt metaphor for Halloween, but one that also reflects the Legislature's limitations in trying to turn around an economy that hinges as much on the balance of international trade and the resolution of turmoil in Iraq as it does on restrictive zoning rules that make affordable housing tough to build in Massachusetts. Facing a $2 billion budget shortfall of its own, the Legislature cannot afford to pour hundreds of millions into economic development or give business the big tax cuts many would probably prefer.

Instead, Senate lawmakers said they can provide small loans, create tax credits for housing, and cut regulatory burdens, to set the stage for an economic recovery and jumpstart a few small companies in the hopes they will grow into big companies, in need of hundreds of new workers. At a press conference announcing the plan, lawmakers declined to offer job creation estimates for the new proposal — a risky gambit should the predictions fall short — but said it was important for the state to do what it could to create a favorable business environment, and try to assist fledgling companies. "We are under no illusions that somehow the state of Massachusetts or this package is going to create thousands of jobs in the first year. It simply can't," said Sen. David Magnani, D-Framingham. "We think that over the long-term it will send a clear message to businesses that Massachusetts is ready to be pro-business and sympathetic to the business community."

The headlines made clear the extent to which state officials can, and cannot, control the economy. Secretary of State William Galvin and federal regulators accused Putnam Investments, with $272 billion in assets under its management, of defrauding investors, charges the firm denies. Then citing broken trust, the state pension fund withdrew $1.7 billion it had given the hometown firm to manage. Bank of America bought FleetBoston Financial in a $48 billion deal that removed the last big area-based bank from the regional scene. Pundits predicted big job losses ahead and cautioned that Boston is fast becoming and outpost for big companies, rather than a host.

And Northeastern University's Center for Labor Market Studies reported that Massachusetts workers are suffering for longer stretches of joblessness than their peers in other states. The jobless recovery here is defying easy solutions and forcing state policy makers to adjust to a prolonged period of slow-to-no growth in tax revenues.

"We are under no illusions that somehow the state of Massachusetts or this package is going to create thousands of jobs in the first year. It simply can't."

— Sen. David Magnani, D-Framingham

It wasn't all gloomy though. The US Commerce Department reported the national economy grew at a 7.3 percent annualized clip in the third quarter, the fastest rate since 1984, and economists in Boston forecast moderate job growth for the year ahead. "A mixed picture is better than a bad picture and we'll take it for now," said Frederick Breimyer, an economist with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

• Church says no to benefits for gays and lesbians — The state's Catholic bisho, said the media misinterpreted their testimony at a legislative hearing and they released a statement saying they firmly oppose benefits for gay and lesbian couples. The statement came after Worcester Bishop Daniel Reilly told lawmakers at a hearing that the Church was "willing to join the discussion if the goal is to look at individual benefits and determine who should be eligible beyond spouses."

• Senate ready to debate stimulus plan — The Senate released a $115 million economic stimulus bill, funded mostly with tobacco reserves and rainy day funds, which appeared to meet with general approval from the House and Governor. The bill was slated for debate yesterday (Nov. 5). The measure seeks to lift the ban on Sunday liquor sales, protect stem cell research from legal challenges, reinvigorate international tourism with new promotional funding, and boost worker training programs, among many other provisions.

• Lions, tigers and bears, no more — Animal rights activists lobbied for a bill that ban lions, tigers, bears and elephants from circus acts, saying the animals are too often subject to abuse. The circus industry says the ban would ruin their business. "The number one reason people come to our show is to see elephants and exotic animals," said Cassie Folk, a Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey spokeswoman. "Sometimes it's the only chance children will get to see the animals in their lives."

• Activists protest rising health care costs — Health Care for All activists roamed the Statehouse with kids in Halloween garb to protest a spike in the cost of children's health care. As of Saturday, Nov. 1, more than 10,000 children on the Children's Medical Security Plan will have to pay four times as much for basic health coverage that does not include emergency or hospital care. Families earning $37,000 will see premiums jump from $21 per month to $90 per month, Health Care for All said.

• Medical error reports surge — The Department of Public Health said that medical error reports from health care providers jumped 76 percent since 1996, although officials attributed much of the surge to better reporting and awareness. The department also said that errors may have contributed to 65 deaths over the last year. The Massachusetts Hospital Association said the report "is an indication that the hospital community, working with state officials, has succeeded in improving reporting rates. We note that the DPH data shows an increase in reports, not incidents." Nurses said there are more errors because hospitals do not have enough nurses on their payrolls to adequately care for all patients.

• Romney seeks full-day kindergarten, with parenting classes — Gov. Mitt Romney proposed full-day kindergarten for students in struggling school districts — provided parents in those communities also attend weekend parenting classes. He appointed a task force led by Boston Foundation chief Paul Grogan to look at developing the idea and other ways to "get our underperforming school districts back on track." The American Civil Liberties Union said mandatory parenting classes would appear to violate the Constitutional provision that services provided to one child in a district must be provided to all, regardless of their parents' attendance in a weekend class.

POLITICAL NOTES

Local Republican news

At its last meeting the Republican Town Committee welcomed three new members: Matthew Grech, Al Moore and Rich Silvia. The town committee now has a full slate of members on the nomination papers that are filed with the Secretary of the Commonwealth. These 35 members will appear on the 2004 Republican Primary election ballot.

Nathaniel Palmer, Peter Guild and Ken Roth have been working on a website for the Town Committee that will be carrying all the committee news and events plus links to other Republican Web sites. The address is: www.cohasssetrepublicans.com — stay tuned for further details.

Several people have jumped into the race for the two district seats on the state committee. Polly Logan and Anne Hilbert are running against each other. As are Conley Ford, John Cafferty and Ron Wheatley. It is good to see so many local energetic Republicans stepping up to the plate.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on three roll calls and local representatives' votes on two roll calls from recent sessions. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

INLAND FISHERIES AND GAME FUND (H 4248)

House 149-0, Senate 36-0, approved and Gov. Romney signed into law a bill restoring the Inland Fisheries and Game Fund. The fund, supported by license fees from fishing, hunting and trapping, is used for the management of wildlife and the protection of habitats and endangered species. It was abolished in the fiscal 2004 budget under a plan that transferred these revenues to the general fund but required that they still be spent for the original purpose. The federal government recently informed state officials that Massachusetts would lose $4.7 million in federal matching funds because a separate fund must be maintained by the state in order to qualify for the federal money. Supporters said the bill would ensure that the state receives the $4.7 million. They noted it is important to restore this separate fund that was created 60 years ago to guarantee that the hunting, fishing and trapping fees be spent for environmental purposes. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

MBTA HEALTH BENEFITS (H 4124)

House 132-21, Senate 33-3, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of a supplemental budget section that exempts Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority (MBTA) employees from the recent changes requiring state workers earning over $35,000 per year to pay 20 percent instead of 15 percent of their health insurance premiums. Override supporters said the MBTA is a special case because it is an independent authority that independently collectively bargains for health benefits. They said the MBTA's agreements must be honored and noted that MBTA workers would pay the higher 20 percent rate when the agreements expire in December. Override opponents said an exemption from the higher rate for one group of employees is unfair to all the other state workers and noted the exemption would cost the state additional money during the ongoing budget crisis. (A "Yea" vote is for the exemption for MBTA workers. A "Nay" vote is against the exemption).

EMPLOYERS AND HEALTH CARE PREMIUMS (S 98)

Senate 37-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill expanding the current law that imposes financial penalties and/or jail sentences on employers who deduct wages from employees for health care insurance but fail to pay the premiums. Current law covers indemnity plans like Blue Cross Blue Shield. The bill would expand the law to include HMOS and dental and vision plans. Supporters said that some executives have misused their authority by neglecting to pay these health care premiums. They noted the current law is outdated and argued the bill would protect more employees from this fraudulent and dangerous practice. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

EXPAND DNA DATABASE (S 187)- The House gave final approval to a bill requiring all convicted felons to submit DNA samples for inclusion in the state's DNA database. Under current law, only criminals convicted of 33 crimes, including murder, kidnapping and rape, are required to submit samples. The measure needs only final approval in the Senate prior to it going to Gov. Romney.

SCHOOL DRESS CODES (H 1447)- The Education Committee held a hearing on legislation allowing local school committees to adopt a code of personal dress and appearance for students. Current law prohibits schools from abridging the rights of students' personal dress and appearance except when school officials determine that a student's personal dress and appearance violate reasonable standards of health, safety and cleanliness.

BAN PAGERS FOR STUDENTS (H 122)- A bill heard by the Education Committee would prohibit public school students from possessing pagers on school grounds or while attending a school-sponsored activity. The proposal allows officials to confiscate the devices but exempts pagers required for a student's health and safety.

TOBACCO ADVERTISING (H 2702)- The Taxation Committee held a hearing on a bill prohibiting tobacco manufacturers, distributors and retailers from taking a tax deduction for expenses they incur for advertising tobacco.

SCHOOL BULLIES (S 261)- The Education Committee held a hearing on legislation requiring all public schools to develop and implement a plan to prevent bullying from occurring and to discipline students who bully.

Don't build sidewalk below St. Stephen's

TO THE EDITOR:

Mr. Tewksbury sent this letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad and the Board of Selectmen.

Do we need a fatal accident to be convinced not to build a sidewalk on South Main Street below the Episcopal Church? I repeat — is the death of someone necessary to convince you — the governing body of our town and the Town Manager — that the sidewalk should not be built?

I wish I'd had a camera the other day when I saw the "almost death" of a mother and two children (in a stroller) on that stretch of sidewalk.

Why do we build it? It's unnecessary and dangerous. The answer I'm given is that we have the $169,000 in hand to do this job so we must do it. My answer/question is this — do you spend the money on a project just because you have the cash when you know it's a mistake?

Return the money — cancel the contract — and sleep at night knowing that's one less source of lawsuits that you'll be faced with.

Shedding light on Straits Pond

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Straits Pond Watershed Association please allow me to publicly thank the presenters who participated in the four Straits Pond Forums. We are grateful to them as they freely gave of their time and expertise to help us to better understand this complex ecosystem. They include:

Forum 1: Dr. Declan DePaor, BU Research Professor (geologic history), Judeth van Hamm (social/cultural history), Linda Beres (1992-1994 Straits Pond studies), Lawry Reid (Forum 1 organizer / other past studies)

Forum 2: Samantha Woods, President of the Weir River Watershed Association / Director of the North and South Rivers Association (Forum 2 organizer / water quality and greenscaping), Christian Krahforst –marine chemist affiliated with the MassBays Program and UMass Boston (nutrients / water quality), and Jason Burtner, South Shore Regional Coordinator for the Massachusetts Office of Coastal Zone Management (water quality and flushing studies)

Forum 3: Rich Kleinman and Carl Nielsen of ESS Group, Wellesley MA (midges and vegetative matter), Fred St. Ours, entomologist affiliated with UMass- Boston (midges-fish-other insects), John Kenney, retired employee of the State Pesticide Board (pesticides), Rob Gilman (organizer)

Forum 4: Katie Lund, Resource Planner with the ACEC Program (Steps in the management process), Tim Smith from CZM Wetlands Restoration Program (Pilgrim Lake Restoration Project in Truro, MA), Eric Hutchins of NOAA (Saratoga Creek Salt Marsh Restoration in Rockport, MA), Jason Burtner of CZM (organizer / Flushing options)

A special thanks you to Larry Cowen for technical assistance with the audio on the Forum 1 videotape. Through his and others help we were able to reach more members of the community via local cable.

I am pleased to announce the "Straits Pond Collection" and copies of the Forums on videotapes are available at both the Hull and Cohasset Public Libraries. The "Straits Pond Collection" contains copies of approximately 20 past studies / reports, as well as numerous news accounts about Straits Pond. I am extremely grateful to Pam Coffman of SC Videography for preparing video and DVD copies of the forums.

The problems with Straits Pond go back over 100 years and are complex. To solve the pond's problems there must be long term community support for a management plan that can be implemented and that works.

We invite any resident of Hull, Cohasset or Hingham to participate in the Feedback/Wrap-up Session on Monday, Nov. 10 from 7-9 p.m. at the Hull Town Hall. (Video broadcast of the Session will be in Cohasset 7-9 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 12 and in Hull 7:30-9:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 13.) The purpose of this meeting is to gain input from the community as to what they want to see in a management proposal for Straits Pond. Input from this session will be incorporated into a proposal to be forward to the Hull and Cohasset Boards of Selectmen in December.

No vote urged on Article 15

TO THE EDITOR

Municipalities across the state are facing a united effort by disparate forces on both sides of the economic and political spectrums whose clear mission is to eliminate the concept of single family zoning in small towns such as ours. The proposed zoning by-law under Article 15 further erodes the concept of single-family zoning as we know it in Cohasset.

Town Meeting in the spring of 2002 approved a similar zoning change, known as the Accessory Dwelling Unit by-law. That by-law has as its stated purposes many of the same goals as the by-law proposed under Article 15, including the creation of affordable rental housing units in our community. Proponents at that time also stated that the Accessory Dwelling unit by-law would help families who might not otherwise be able to afford a single family home in our town to be able to do so by means of the income-producing accessory apartment unit.

However, unlike the proposed by-law in Article 15, the Accessory Dwelling Unit by-law incorporates a number of safeguards to prevent runaway use — and abuse — of the by-law to protect the essential integrity of our zoning by-laws. Most notably, the Accessory Dwelling Unit by-law limits both the number of permits which may be granted per calendar year and the size of the Accessory Unit. The proposed by-law in Article 15 contains no such limiting provisions, other than a seemingly arbitrary sunset provision for its expiration in the year 2007.

I believe that before Town Meeting takes up consideration of Article 15, my fellow residents need to think about these questions:

Why do we need a new zoning by-law, which significantly chips away at single-family zoning, when we already have the Accessory Dwelling Unit by-law which purports to accomplish the same objectives?

Is the Accessory Dwelling Unit fulfilling its objectives, and if not, why not? If not, then rather than place a new and more far-reaching zoning by-law on the books, why not address the deficiencies, if any, in the Accessory Dwelling by-law?

Moreover, why is there a need to create still more apartment-unit housing in our town in light of the recent approval by the ZBA of the Avalon Bay development which will bring us 200 apartment units, of which 25 percent will be for residents of low and moderate income? Can anyone seriously suggest that there is a need in our town beyond what Avalon Bay will be fulfilling?

How many additional apartment units does the Planning Board feel will be created under the new by-law and in what neighborhoods? How many more children for our school system will this proposed by-law bring into our town, thereby exacerbating the problem which everyone seems so concerned about with Avalon Bay?

Why is the Planning Board proposing this article in such haste, before the final adoption of the town Master Plan?

Why is the Planning Board willing to grant amnesty to individuals who knowingly, intentionally, and willfully have been breaking the law by means of these illegal apartments? What message does this send about the enforcement — or non-enforcement — of our zoning by-laws, other than to say, "If you can get away with it for long enough, we'll eventually grant you amnesty?"

When the Accessory Dwelling Unit by-law first came up two years ago, opponents at that time (including our Planning Bd.) spoke not only of their concerns with that by-law as initially presented (most which were rectified for the spring Town Meeting, which then passed the article), but also of the proverbial slippery slope which our community would encounter once it started down the path of tinkering with our zoning by-laws. It is inevitable that once that door is opened, special interest groups will seek to jump on the bandwagon with further incursions into the status quo.

That prophecy has been realized with amazing rapidity. Last fall's Town Meeting approved the Senior Overlay District which already has resulted in two plans for high-density developments.

Now we have Article 15 on this year's Town Meeting agenda which by its very terms promises both to be another bureaucratic nightmare for our town and to bring us closer to the total elimination of single-family zoning anywhere and everywhere in Cohasset – with the primary beneficiaries being those who have been flouting our zoning by-laws for their economic self-interest.

Zoning – high density, low density, or in-between – is what defines a community to its core. Rather than yielding to those who seek to develop land to its maximum economic potential for their own gain, our Planning Board and other town boards should be slowing this train down. Even a casual observer of town affairs must realize that our community as we know it is at an historic crossroads. We are at a point in time when we are being confronted with the dramatic changes to our community in the form of the return of the train and the developments of Avalon Bay, Cedarmere, and the Cook Estate which will strain many of our town services and infrastructure for which we are ill-prepared to handle.

Article 15's drastic changes to our zoning by-laws unquestionably will change the look of our town in the immediate future. We need to stop the steamroller of special interest groups, catch our breath, and see how all of these imminent changes are going to impact our community before we continue to roll ever faster down that slippery slope which has brought us the Accessory Dwelling Unit by-law, the Senior Overlay District, and Article 15 – what's next?

McColgan will introduce the attendees to four different teas, each a little further along in the processing continuum. Participants will sip white tea, green tea, oolong tea, and black tea, and are asked to bring their favorite drinking vessel. Tea sandwiches and finger desserts will be also served.

But McColgan was not always as knowledgeable about tea as she is today, and did not always have the interest in tea she currently does.

As a young girl, McColgan had no interest in tea to speak of. Her mother would sometimes brew her a cup when she was sick, and she carried that negative connotation with her all the way into adulthood. However, becoming reacquainted with the loose leaves of today, she's changed her tune and believes with a little taste-testing, anyone can find a blend to their liking.

"There are over 10,000 varieties of tea," she said, and her shop carries an array of palate pleasers from mango to licorice to standard black tea, all ready for the brewing. She aims to please even the most finicky tea connoisseur, trying each and every tea herself before allowing it on her shelves, knowing all too well how important a first impression with tea can be.

"I taste all my tea first. If I don't like it, I won't put it up," she said.

But sometimes it does take a little prodding by a loved one to try something new, which is what it took to change McColgan's mind. Having disliked tea for years, McColgan was somehow convinced by her husband one day to visit a tea shop in Quincy, and at his request, they purchased a loose leaf Irish breakfast tea. When they returned home, her husband brewed the tea, and once she tried it, she couldn't believe it was actually tea. It was "not anything like what you buy in the grocery store," she said, and from there she became interested in trying other varieties. Because she would have to travel back and forth to Quincy to purchase the loose leaf tea, she and her husband thought the South Shore should have a tea shop of its own, and decided they would be the ones to bring it.

In January of 2000, McColgan opened her first shop in Hanover, and moved to her current location in North Scituate in October of 2001. Through much study and research, she has been able to expand her business to include tea tasting workshops and various educational tea talks.

But before beginning her new business venture, McColgan was a cosmetologist by trade. She began looking into reflexology and healing herbs to add to her business experience, and because her interest in tea had already been sparked by her husband, she began researching what she had heard in terms of its healing properties. After doing some research, she was intrigued by the claims of its health benefits, and knew getting into the tea business was something she had to do.

"Tea is antibacterial," she said, adding she would recommend everyone drink at least one cup a day to help boost immunity. Green tea is high in antioxidants and has reported health benefits, but she said everything she has read points to all tea different tea varieties having antioxidants. She also said tea is a good beverage to drink if you travel. In many countries, tourists are advised not to drink the water, and McColgan said drinking tea while on vacation may help ward off different kinds of food poisonings by killing off the bacteria.

But a common misconception McColgan has come to find in her studies is that many people call any kind of leaves brewed in hot water a tea, which is not true. True tea comes from tea leaves, and no matter what kind of tea a person drinks, whether it be black, green, or oolong, it all comes from the same plant.

"People call anything tea, but peppermint tea really isn't tea," she said, adding only tea leaves which are blended with peppermint leaves can be called a true peppermint tea.

In her shop, McColgan offers many different varieties of tea leaves blended with other ingredients to give the leaves flavors. Chopped fruits give a fresh spin on regular tea and different herbs blend to make wonderful aromas during brewing. But McColgan does specialty teas of her own, blending all-natural ingredients, which she said she tries to do whenever possible, to create a tea unlike any other. One of her best selling items is the Minot's Light tea, which is Ceylon tea with apple, blackberry, blueberry, cranberry, and raspberry fruit bits. She said people like to drink the tea all year long because of it's fruity taste and she said it is just as good hot as it is cold. But she might say that about any tea.

"I think people should really drink tea all year long. It's a good thing to do."

The cost of the Historical Society tea is $10 per person and is open to anyone who loves tea or wants to try it. In order to prepare the appropriate amount of food, please reserve your place by calling the Historical Society at (781)-383-1168 before Nov. 7.

Third time still not the charm

CHS boys ousted in quarterfinals by Norwell, 2-0

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The third time was still not the charm for the Cohasset boys soccer team.

For the third time this season, on Tuesday, the Skippers fell to their South Shore League rival Norwell Clippers. Of course, this 2-0 setback was infinitely more painful than the previous two losses combined, as this one ended their season.

The host Clippers would get all the offense they would require in this Div. 3 south sectionals quarterfinals match-up just 65 seconds in, as sophomores Scott Kitchen and Andrew Olsen combined on a very pretty goal. A nice fake and move to the outside gained Olsen a step on his mark on a charge into the top left corner of the box, and let him see the streaking Kitchen on a run toward the opposite post. The diagonal pass led Kitchen perfectly, slipping just beyond the reach of his mark, and the sophomore one-timed the shot back far-side past helpless Cohasset keeper Jesse Brewer.

The 10th seeded Skippers — who'd defeated Avon, 7-1, to advance to go round number three with second seeded Norwell (18-2)—seemed to be fired up by this goal, and bounced back with some of their most inspired play against the powerhouse Clippers this year, creating several solid scoring chances over the remainder of the first half.

In the 16th minute, Cohasset senior Kevin Dinsmore hit the

Hornets sting Skippers

CHS field hockey team no match for Mansfield in postseason opener

Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

What a great season for the Cohasset field hockey players.

The Skippers finished third in the South Shore League with an overall record of 9-8 to qualify for the state tournament for the first time since 2000. Postseason hopes shifted to disappointment, however, as they lost to a highly talented Mansfield squad on Thursday.

The Mansfield Hornets decisively beat the Lady Skippers by a score of 5-1 last Thursday on Hornets' home turf. The Hornets had earned the home team advantage because they lost three fewer games than the Lady Skippers did during the regular season.

The Hornets stung early and often. At halftime, they led 2-0 thanks to their many breakaways and precision stick-work. Their impressive transition playmaking resulted in three more goals before the ref blew the final whistle.

"Mansfield was an extremely quick team with admirable finishing skills," note Cohasset head coach Deb Bostwick. "We played to our full potential, but just didn't have what it took to beat such an experienced team."

Cohasset's lone score came on a dazzling pass from Danielle Pinkus to Courtney Caron, who sent a rocket shot past Mansfield's goalie. The game seemed out of reach to the Skippers for much of the game.

Looking back upon the season, senior Frannie Noble commented: "This was such a wonderful season. The team was so unified. We all worked so well together."

Bad bounces do in lady booters

CHS girls fall in tourney opener to Sacred Heart, 2-1

By Mark Goodman
CORRESPONDENT

Even in the playoffs, it is not enough to simply outplay your opponents.

You need a little luck, and a few bounces to go your way.

Luck was not on the side of the Cohasset girls soccer team on Saturday, as it lost their first round playoff game to Sacred Heart in Kingston, 2-1.

The score was not indicative of how the game was played. The Skippers played better than the home Saints, getting to more loose balls and creating better scoring opportunities.

Cohasset finally made good on one of those opportunities with one minute to go, as striker Lauren Rizzotti scored a beautiful one-touch goal off of a cross from Casey Anderson.

Unfortunately for the girls in blue, it was too little too late.

The Saints got their first goal in the 51st minute, as junior midfielder Jill Skrzyniarz headed in a corner. The corner kick was right at Cohasset keeper CeCelia Chapman, but it glanced off her shoulder and right to Skrzyniarz standing behind her.

Thirteen minutes later, Sacred Heart would strike again off of another bad bounce for Cohasset.

Canton ends CHS gridders' run at unbeaten season

Friday night football
Abington at Cohasset
7 p.m. kickoff

Cohasset had three shortcomings in their Halloween night contest with the Canton Bulldogs: failure to convert on three of four extra point/conversion attempts, the inability to knock down three long pass plays which resulted in two touchdowns and setup a third from the 6-yard line, and three drive ending turnovers, two on the final two series of the game.

The result was a three point loss, 29-26, that ended the Skippers run at an unbeaten season.

Cohasset now stands at 6-1, 2-0 in South Shore League play, with a Friday night date with SSL rival Green Wave from Abington (6-2, 2-1).

The Bulldogs scored first on a fourth down-24 yard pass play to their tight end. The Skippers had turned the ball over to Canton at their own 43-yard line. The extra point made the score 7-0.

The Skippers answered with a three play-64 yard drive. On second down, senior captain quarterback Mike Dooley (76 yards rushing and 128 yards passing) ran the option play to the right. Senior captain Steve Davis wiped out a few would be tacklers from his right guard spot and senior tight end Sean Connolly threw a nice block, helping Dooley to a 31-yard gain down to the Canton 29-yard line. Senior tailback DeWayne Morris, not to be outdone, ran left behind senior Dan Tarpey at left tackle and sophomore Nick Arment at left guard, a nice lead block from junior fullback Ted Straughn, and downfield blocking from wideouts, senior captain Chris Bilodeau and junior Crandon Leahy, ran to pay dirt with rela-

Cohasset-Scituate Youth Football rules

Five of six teams advance to Super Bowl games on Sunday

By Dick Cushman
CORRESPONDENT

Scituate/Cohasset Youth Football teams seem to have put together a winning combination with the Sharks Division 1 and the Stingrays Division 5 Leagues of the Old Colony Youth Football Program.

"It' unbelievable all six teams representing the town of Scituate," Director of Scituate Youth Football Ed Crowley said. "All made the play-offs. Then to have five of those teams win to get them a vie for a Super Bowl Title is super in itself.

"Joe Obert took this second team program and made it work. The time and effort he put into it with the other towns should not go unnoticed. The kids have benefited from his dedication, in the fact that more of the kids in the program have more playing time. My hats off to Joe Obert."

The Sharks Midget team squeaked by a very good Barnstable team, 8-6, at home this past Saturday night.

"The kids have not lost all year and their toughness showed against Barnstable with this win," offered coach Dan O'Brien. "The Barnstable team gave us a big scare in the final minutes of the game, but a big interception in the red zone by Blaine O'Brien helped us put this one in the books."

' The Sharks Mites also came up big on their game at the high school field Saturday night. Kyle Livingstone's two-point safety stunned Marshfield early in the game.

The Sharks Mitch McNary touchdown would ice this game with an impressive 8-0 score.

"The kids based their year on speed, quickness and toughness and Marshfield had problems with our teams mind set," stated Head Coach Ralph Froio. "The team and my fellow coach's are left post from eight yards out off of a well served free kick from just outside the right corner of the goal area by fellow senior John Andrade. A few minutes earlier, Cohasset sweeper Conor Buick nearly caught the Norwell defense sleeping when he quickly blasted a free kick from 40 yards straight out that keeper Mike Allen had to knock away at the last instant as it was hooking back inside the right goal post. Allen was also forced to come out aggressively and play three balls served into the goal area in the opening half.

Of course, this inspired play probably had more than a little to do with the realization the Clippers were somewhat vulnerable, with one of their three All-Eastern Mass players (team leading goal scorer Robbie Beach) out for the remainder of the season due to a fractured orbital bone, and a second (Garret Bates) slowed by a rib cage bruise.

Bates, who many feel was the top player in the South Shore League this year, showed he was better than reports, however, as he played all 80 minutes of regulation.

"I'll take Garrett Bates at 80 percent over most of the players in the South Shore League," noted Norwell coach Jack Browne. "He's just such an important part of our team."

The inability to cash in on any of these aforementioned chances came back to haunt the Skippers in the second half, as the Clippers settled into their beautifully run ball possession offense, and rarely let the Skippers get anything going on their side of midfield.

And, on those few forays into Clippers territory, Norwell's talented and so in sync back four of Pat Manning, Jason Kulik, Chris Pisarkewicz and Matt Sammartino were seemingly there to get to every 50-50 ball first and work the ball quickly back upfield.

"Those four guys were just huge again today," appraised Browne. "There all such fundamentally solid players who play so well together. Right now, I can't remember as single misplayed ball or bad kick today. They just made the plays they needed to time after time."

This one says 1,000 words. Cohasset goalie Jesse Brewer is in no hurry to get up after Norwell's second goal was booted over him in Tuesday's 2-0 season ending quarterfinals loss.

Cohasset received some extremely strong play in back as well led by league all-stars Brewer and Buick, both seniors. The 6-foot-2 Buick alone headed or booted away no fewer than a dozen balls served into the Cohasset box over the course of the game, and was clearly the Skippers best player on the field on this afternoon.

"We probably would have had a few more goals if it wasn't for their sweeper," noted Browne. "He's just a great player. But I've been saying that for years. I'm glad we won't have to face him anymore."

However, Buick and Brewer couldn't get to everything. Norwell got its insurance goal in the 55th minute off of a corner kick from the left of the Cohasset goal. With Cohasset packing it into the box, Curt Alpert served up a soft pass toward the top corner of the area to Olsen, who then touched it toward the middle of the box where captain Ryan Henry ran on to it and blasted away. This salvo was deflected by a quick reacting Cohasset defender, but it bounced right to Alpert who unloaded from 12 yards out. Brewer made a nice diving stop to his left on this one, but Norwell's James Finkenstaedt reached the carom first and roofed it from eight yards out over the downed and helpless Brewer.

The win advances Norwell to the semifinals and a meeting tonight (6 p.m.) with 11th seeded Cardinal Spellman (15-3-2), who stunned just about the entire Eastern Mass soccer following community on Tuesday by edging third seeded Ashland, 1-0.

The other two semifinalists—eighth seeded Medway (15-1-4) and fourth seeded Carver (17-2-1), who finished second to Norwell in the South Shore League this fall, with the two teams splitting their two regular season meetings—will also face off against one another at Brockton High tonight. The winners from these games will meet in the South Sectional championship game over the weekend, likely on Saturday right back at Brockton High.

Soccer Notes

Skippers 7, Avon 1

The Cohasset boys had little trouble in the opener on the road against seventh seeded Avon (15-3) on Saturday, although there were a few anxious moments after the host Panthers scored the first goal at 7:45.

However, senior Kevin Dinsmore got the equalizer less than four minutes later, finishing on a pass from senior captain Chris Clark, and senior Dave Santiago gave the Skippers the last goal they would need just 90 seconds after that.

Three Cohasset goals five minutes apart late in the first half would break the game open.

Santiago made it 3-1 in the 31stt minute. John Andrade and Clark scored their first of two goals in the 33rd and 35th minutes, respectively, to send the game into the break, 5-1.

Coastal Stars Youth Hockey report

Squirt A

The Coastal Star Squirt A team extended their winning streak to 4 games with a 4-1 win over Duxbury. The Stars forechecked and cycled the puck as well as they have all year and kept the puck away from Duxbury for most of the game. A first period goal by John Collins, assisted by Ryan Donovan and Tyler Martina, put the Stars up 1-0 nothing and they never let let up from their. They crashed the net looking for rebounds the entire game and got their second goal when a hustling Pat Cull made a terrific play down the left wing beating two duxbury defenders to a loose puck and firing it at the net where Connor McLean was perfectly positioned for the rebound. The Duxbury goaltender made two terrific stops but couldn't handle the next rebound that was put in the back of the net by Ryan Donovan for the first of his two goals. Ryan's second goal came in the third period and was unassisted putting the Stars up 3-0 and in toatal control of the game. Connor Mclean made it 4-0 when he put in a rebound of a Jeff Durkin shot mid way through the final period. Travers Craven also had an assist on the play. Brian Scott was a defensive standout playing his best game ever. He consistently beat the opposition to loose pucks and made smart passes out of the defensive end. Also worth noting was the play of Kevin Kelly in net as he made many big saves early in the contest and he continues to get better and more confident each week. His shutout bid was spoiled with less than two minutes to play.

Mite C1

It was a nail-biter this week between the Coastal Stars Mite C-1's and Braintree. It could have gone either way but the Stars pulled out a goal in the last few minutes to end it in a 3-3 tie. Braintree took the lead early in the first period but Patrick Shea, left wing on the first line off the bench, leveled the score with an assist by Tommy Prendergast, the center. Pendergast followed with his own goal, a textbook lifter that nailed the corner. Working hard to protect the lead, Brodie Jackisch and Owen Burchill again proved to be effective at defense, keeping the puck out of the Star's end. However, with a few well executed board passes, Braintree had a few opportunities to take the puck in deep. Thanks to the strong, fast skating by right winger Adam Benson, the plays were broken up each time before a shot could be taken. The second line off the bench, anchored by Colby Comeau at center, faced a strong Braintree line who repeatedly used the boards well to move the puck along and keep the stars defensive team of Jake Burchill and Brendan O'Connell hustling. Burchill and O'Connell showed their own passing skills, consistently putting the puck on the sticks of wingers Derek Benson and Justin Fein. The Stars third line off the bench had Tucker Ambrose at center, Cameron Lamaureux on right wing, Colin MacDonald at left, and Charlie Blackington and Brian Palmieri on defense, fought hard for every loose puck. Despite their efforts, Braintree scored to take a 3-2 lead half way through the third period. Stars goalie Kevin Meehan was put to the test but did an excellent job keeping Braintree to just three goals. The excitement and pressure mounted as Braintree took their second penalty and the Stars tried to capitalize, only to be shut down again. But the Stars were rewarded eventually for their persistence and determination when Charlie Blackington followed up on a shot by Colin MacDonald and popped it in. The last six minutes of the game brought the crowd to their feet as each team fought hard to produce a goal and keep their own net protected. It could have gone either way with some very close shots, but it ended in a draw and a huge sigh of relief that the Stars still have a 0 in the losses column.

Mites C2

On Sunday, the Coastal Stars Mites C-2 dropped a tough decision to Weymouth 2-1 at the Hobomock Arenas. From the outset, Weymouth turned up the pressure on Stars Goalie Matt Doyle but he proved to be up to the task, stopping everything sent his way during the first period. After a continued attack by Weymouth, the Stars finally began to shake their first period jitters. Both Michael McPartlin and Joe Proctor battled their Weymouth opponents in the corners coming up with several loose pucks creating opportunities for teammates. Jack Evitts could not capitalize on an open rush to the net as the Weymouth goaltender made a right pad save. On the defensive end, Kal Maier and Robbie Bertone held tough and were solid controlling the puck in their own zone. Defensemen Aidan Beresford and Thomas Coyne were a force playing the blue line and keeping the puck in the offensive end. Unfortunately though, the Stars were unable to fend off their opponents in the second period as Weymouth scored on a 20 ft shot from the right side making it 1-0. Matt Boudreau, Jack Kaetzer and Brendan Evitts contributed with scrappy play in the offensive zone but Weymouth countered with tough position play. The Stars had plenty of chances but could not convert them into goals. Jeremy Archibald was stopped on an impressive break away rush, one of several exciting scoring bids he had in the game. Weymouth answered with another goal making it 2-0 at the end of the 2nd period. Three minutes into the 3rd period, the Stars finally put one up on the board with some nifty skating by Patrick Graham who went in uncontested and beat the Weymouth goalie on the left side. The Stars continued to kick it up a notch with great offensive play by John Leahy, Tristan Wiggin and Joey Redfearn. Later in the period, Robert Reidy made a key clear out of the zone to thwart the Weymouth attack and relieve pressure on his goalie. The Stars continued to work hard in the last period but were unable to put it together for the tie.

looking forward to the Super Bowl game against Barnstable, we have only lost to then once in the past years."

Scituate/Cohasset's third victory came at the hands of a much improved Hingham squad. The Stingrays come-from-behind 8-6 victory came on a Kyle Crowley 11-yard touchdown run in the third quarter and a Dean Kennedy 2-point conversion.

"Hingham played us tough," smiled Head Coach Larry McInerney. "We had handled them relatively easy in our two other meetings. The difference in this one might have been Kyle Ewanoski's monster defensive play. He had the team fired up, not to mention the parents being fired up by Will Charles the newly appointed parent cheerleader.

"This team's undefeated record has been a super year for the team, most of the teams we handled pretty easy. The kids had to very impressive wins against the Hanover team."

The wins continued with a Stingrays PeeWee 6-0 shut-out of Hingham. This game played scoreless for three quarters and a bear power pass late in the fourth quarter would give the Stingrays Pee Wee their vie at the Super Bowl.

"We tried everything against this Hingham team," said head coach Cole Hawkins. "Their line was tough. Anthony Antonino stepped up big when we needed it. All of my team played outstanding, it was a great win for the kids."

Yes, the Stingray Mites also won. This reporter is running out of words for victory - win - etc., etc.

The Mighty Mites racked up an impressive 28 points to give them a win over Barnstable at Battis Field in Middleboro.

"This was a much improved team, 100 percent tougher than we expected," coach Kevin Dooley said of the Barnstable squad. "This one went back and fourth. We were tied at the half with a Matt Cousins 55 yard touchdown and Mike Hassett to Mike Tangherlini passing touchdown."

Casey Burns lugs the rock for the Stingray PeeWees.

The Mites would gain control again with a third quarter touchdown on a QB Mike Hassett sneak only to find Barnstable knocking on the door with a long touchdown run.

"Thank goodness Mike Stewart iced it for us with his touchdown at the 1:30 mark," said coach Dooley. "Thank you, Mike."

Unfortunately, the Sharks Pee Wee team played against a very tough and talented Barnstable Silver Bullets team. Their 34-6 lost dashed any hope of a clean sweep to the Super Bowl.

"We come off a 10-0 season; we knew it was going to be hard to repeat with losing eight starters," offered Sharks head coach Craig Dias. "The whole team played well. The captains — Craig Dias, Morgan Billings, John Maher and Kevin Barberry— stepped up this year and had great games. I told the kids it is tough to be perfect every year, but we enjoyed the year and our football teachings has made the players better for future play."

The Sharks Midgets will go head-to- head with the Silver Lake team at Silver Lake High School on Sunday, Nov. 9,at 1p.m. for the Super Bowl Title.

The Sharks Mites will be playing just a head of them at 11:30 against Barnstable.

All three teams representing the Stingrays will be traveling to host Hingham to play Barnstable, Middleboro and Hanover, respectively, starting at 11:30 a.m. on Sunday.

President Bob McQuad added to the program high lights of this year.

"As well as we will be represented by our football players in the upcoming Super Bowl, let us not forget the cheerleaders," said McQuaid. "Lori Niel has done a great job heading up this part of our youth program. She has almost 200 girls to coordinate. It shows well out on the field. The girls have done a fantastic job cheering on the football players. Their halftime performances are picture perfect."

Michael Corcoran, of the Scituate Shark Mites, makes a move to the outside.

Like some of her classmates, Frannie hopes to play intramural field hockey in college.

Joining Frannie in their last field hockey game for Cohasset were goalie Caitlin Condon, sweeper Rachael Doyle, and defensive players Kelly Hurley, Carling Sturino, Tess Foley, and Jessie Guilds. Midfielders Corey Evans, Danielle Pinkus, Meghan Marr, and forward line players Courtney Caron and Kristin Howard will all graduate in 2004.

Coach Deb Bostwick recognizes the daunting task lying ahead.

"There are so many spots to fill for next year," said Bostwick. "We will need to rebuild another powerful team.

"I'm counting on some JV players and freshmen to step up to the plate. I'm hoping all players will take advantage of the indoor leagues in Plymouth and East Bridgewater to work on their games."

Just about every member of the team seemed to agree this was a fabulous season.

In addition to the aforementioned seniors, the team also included Liz Condos, Allison Dean, Courtney Hurley, Christina St. Pierre, Colby Durant, Allison Fludder, Brooke Allen, Aaron Bigley, Katie James, Remy Lee, Mia Lieb-Lappen, and Katherine Whoriskey.

plary game in the Skippers' back line, attempted to clear out a long ball in her direction. The ball ricocheted off a charging Saint and to the feet of forward Shannon McNichols, who gathered the ball and scored on the breakaway.

Sacred Heart had only one serious threat after that, another McNichols breakaway that led to a nice save from Chapman. Cohasset put on an all-out attack on their opponents' goal, an attack that came up a little short in the end.

The teams battled to a scoreless tie in the first half, but again, the score did not accurately represent the tenor of the game. A large majority of the action came in Sacred Heart's end of the field.

Seniors Jenn Buckley, Gillian Weber and Sarah McMorris led the Skippers attack, keeping Saints goalie Anne Marie Pooler and sweeper Tory Belliveau busy.

Buckley was the best player on the field, dominating from her center-midfield position. Any loose ball in the middle of the field was hers, and she was consistently able to turn it into a quality scoring chance for Cohasset.

Buckley, Weber, Rizzotti and junior midfielder Nicole Whitney all got off good shots at the Sacred Heart net in the first 20 minutes. All of them either just missed the net or required a good block or save from a defender or Pooler.

The contest was clean, yet physical, and saw a few injuries. Rizzotti and Weber went down at the 34th and 41st minutes, respectively, but both came back later in the game.

The same could not be said for McMorris, who injured her right knee while battling for the ball in front of the Cohasset goal. The senior forward, one of the Skippers' top athletes and goal-scoring threats, had to be helped off the field and did not return.

Despite playing wounded up front, Cohasset managed to create more scoring chances in the second half. At one point, Anderson had three straight corner kicks, which all required good defensive plays from Sacred Heart. Weber and Buckley each got off their own long, booming kicks toward the goal that were saved.

It was simply not meant to be for the Skippers, who finished their season with a 10-8-1 record. Considering where they were a month ago, the Cohasset girls deserve a lot of credit for even getting to this point, as they saved their best soccer for the second half of the season.

Adding injury to insult, CHS senior Sarah McMorris is helped from the field after she twisted her knee. Sarah, a senior, did not return in the heartbreaking 2-1 loss for the Lady Skippers.

Canton botched a punt attempt in the second quarter and the Skippers took over on the Bulldogs' 11-yard line. Cohasset kept it on the ground. On third down, Dooley went between Arment, Tarpey, and behind Straughn for a 6-yard score. After the pass conversion was broken up, Cohasset led 14–7.

The teams swapped punts. Junior Joe Durkin booted it out of the end zone for Cohasset and Canton started out on the Skippers 40-yard line. A first down 34 yard pass completion set the Bulldogs up at the 6-yard line. They proceeded to run it in, and the extra point tied it up at 14 a piece.

Cohasset returned the ensuing kickoff back to its 27-yard line. On first down, Dooley lofted one to Bilodeau (six catches for 119 yards) fromCanton's 48-yard line. The gifted senior wideout caught it between two defenders and proceeded to sprint untouched to the end zone. However, the conversion again failed, leavign Cohasset with only a six point lead at the half, 20-14.

Canton's opening drive of the third quarter was a 75-yard march capped off with a 13-yard burst to the right side. The kick was successful, giving the Bulldogs a 21-20 lead.

Cohasset returned the favor with a 60-yard drive. In the time consuming push, Morris carried seven times. On the last carry, he sprinted in around the left side behind Tarpey, Arment, and Connolly. The pass conversion failed, leaving Cohasset with a five point of 26-21.

The Bulldogs aerial attack then struck again. After returning the kickoff to their own 28 yard line, the Bulldogs scored the go ahead touchdown on a 72-yard pass play down the left side on first down. The conversion pass was good and the score stood at 29-26 Canton at the end of the third quarter.

The Skippers hadn't given up all season, and weren't about to start here. The offense advanced the ball from their own 28-yard line to the Canton 35 halfway through the fourth quarter. However, a blitzing Bulldog linebacker forced a turnover.

The Skippers defense held strong, trying to get the offense one more chance. Junior defensive linemen Kelvin Ferriera and Matt Baroudi clogged the middle, and the linebacking trio cleaned up and forced a punt by Canton.

Cohasset started out on its own 20, as the punt went through the end zone. On a crucial fourth down-and-seven, Dooley hit Bilodeau again for eight yards and a first down, moving the ball to Cohasset's 45-yard line. On the subsequent third down play, the blitz did Cohasset in for the final time, creating yet another turnover that allowed the hosts to run out the clock.

This week's Preview

Cohasset hosts the Abington Green Wave Friday night at 7 PM, their final home game of the year. This has become an annual battle to remain in the hunt for the League championship, Abington prevailed last year on their way to the Division 5 Super Bowl crown, while Cohasset pulled out a dramatic victory in 2001 (with over 2,000 fans in attendance at Alumni field) on their way to the Super Bowl tournament. There is sure to be another huge crowd for this crucial contest. An Abington loss will eliminate them from capturing first place in the SSL. A Cohasset win will setup a battle for the league Championship the following week against Norwell.

With cooler weather in store, breakout the LJ's, the turtlenecks, the earmuffs, gloves, scarfs, and The Minks, and arrive early to help support the Skippers from the get go, and to obtain a parking spot that won't require the use of a shuttle bus.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Collecting box tops for education

The employees of the Cohasset Recycling Center have been collecting the box tops as they take in cardboard boxes to be recycled. They were responsible for collecting more than one third of the funds earned this past year.

The Deer Hill School has been participating in the Box Tops For Education program, sponsored by General Mills. It is a great opportunity for the school to earn extra money. They have slated the money earned, to purchase new books for the school library. The students have been collecting box tops from many General Mills products, and sending them into the company for cash! Last year alone, they collected more than $1,500 in box tops for the Deer Hill library. Their efforts earned the students an ice cream party for the entire school last spring! The prospect of purchasing some very needed books for the students, has greatly pleased Mrs. Murphy, the school librarian at Deer Hill.

Cohasset residents can participate in this program as well. Collecting the Box Tops for Education labels, found on many food products from General Mills, and sending them over to the Deer Hill library, will help the students earn new books.

People all over town have been collecting these box tops for the school. The employees of the Cohasset Recycling Center have been collecting the box tops as they take in cardboard boxes to be recycled. They were responsible for collecting more than one third of the funds earned this past year. Please thank them as you drop off you recycling each week. Deer Hill School appreciates their efforts, as well as the efforts of the students and their families.

The school is hoping that all residents will get into the box top groove. For more information, contact Pam Wilson-coordinator for the Deer Hill PSO at 781-383-3076.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

WAXY BUILDUP

The skin of the ear canal grows outward from the eardrum, acting as a conveyer belt that carries wax to the ear opening. Impaction occurs when, for some reason, the wax moves inward instead. The symptoms of earwax impaction include discomfort, a feeling of fullness, and difficulty hearing. This is common among those who wear hearing instruments, which may push the earwax inward when the devices are placed in the ears. People who think that they are experiencing difficulty hearing because their hearing instrument is malfuctioning or needs a new battery may find that earwax is the real culprit. Mildly impacted earwax can often be dislodged with an over-the-counter earwax softener; however, never insert a cotton swab into the ear canal. When it's hard to distinguish between the inability to hear because of earwax or because continual bombardment by noise, it's time for a hearing test. Don't miss out on the sounds of life. Have a comprehensive hearing evaluation here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER so that we can accurately determine the reason behind your hearing loss. We carry many major brands of hearing instruments and will find the one that is right for you. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, and we also have an office in Abington. PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. Consult with a doctor if earwax resists your effort to remove it or if you experience pain, tenderness, swelling, persistent hearing loss, or milky discharge.

Local author shares memories of life on Peddocks Island

The late Matilda Sylvia is author of the book.

PHOTOS/ COURTESY OF HOT HOUSE PRESS

Alexander Bies was the father of the author, attached to the 59th Coastal Artillery Corps stationed at Peddocks Island in the first decade of the 20th century.

Matilda is front and center as a child in this undated photo taken on the lawn of the Hull Village School.

CORRESPONDENT

If you were living in Hull, Hingham or Weymouth in the late spring of 1904, you probably looked across the water to the bustle of activity on Peddocks Island and wondered what exactly was going on. By then you would have been used to the sight of military uniforms all around the harbor, but across the water at the yet-to-be-completed Fort Andrews (named for Major General George Leonard Andrews), something big was happening.

Then, if you were one of the hundreds who read any one of the nine papers of publisher Floretta Vining's South Shore Syndicate of newspapers each week – the Hull Beacon, the Hingham Bucket, the Cohasset Sentinel, and so on – you would have seen this single entry on the first page of the May 20, 1904 edition:

"With the 59th company coast artillery which arrived at Fort Andrew this week from San Juan, P.R., are seven native women, wives of members of this company. The 59th Co. will form a permanent garrison at Fort Andrew, which has been a sub post of Fort Strong, taking the place of the temporary garrison, a detachment of men from the 46th Co. under Lieut. Wheatly. The men are praying for warm weather as yesterday's rain and fog gave them a decided chill after the tropics, and until more extensive barracks are built the men will be greatly crowded unless the weather permits of their living in tents."

For about a year, the men of the 59th Company coastal artillery unit did live in tents as their buildings were constructed. Somewhere among that mob of uniformed men marched Alexander Bies, and it is with Mr. Bies' arrival to Peddocks that one of the most important books on Boston Harbor island life yet to be published, "Once Upon an Island," begins.

Alexander Bies did not know how to load any of the cannon that would be placed on the island, nor could he fire one in an emergency, but he could make any soldier look damn good in his uniform, or a suit of civilian clothing for that matter. Bies was a soldier, for sure, but he was not your typical soldier. He was the 59th company's tailor. And he was the father of the author of "Once Upon an Island," the late Matilda Sylvia of Norwell.

"Fort Andrew was a beautiful Post," she writes, "The landscape only enhanced the beauty of the architecture. The red brick barracks sat in an impressive, slightly terraced row, bordering one side of the parade grounds with the road running in front of them, and facing the hospital and officers' quarters on a steep double terrace." Visiting Peddocks Island today, or, indeed, just looking across Hull Gut to East Head from Pemberton Point in Hull, one can see the crumbling remains of the once vibrant and crisp military complex Sylvia describes.

According to Sylvia, Bies' first six years on the island passed by quickly, with at least little to tell from a family standpoint. Then, sometime in 1910, he met Salem's Matilda Walker, born during the great March blizzard of 1888. Her first visit to what would be her island home for a quarter of a century proved to be the genesis of an amazingly comical event. Unhappy at the prospect of living on the base, she persuaded her fiancé to move his home/tailor shop, at that time next to the boat dock and facing Pemberton Point, around the point to the southern shore of the island. Bies enlisted the help of some able-bodied men and floated the house by makeshift barge to its final foundation, but not before it slipped off its floats and half into the sea, as the tailor stood on shore tearing at his hair. The house eventually reached its destination and became the home of the Bies family until it burned in a fire in September of 1934, after which they constructed a new house. Between 1910 and World War II, Bies and Walker married and raised three children on the island.

"I arrived on the scene on October 23, 1917. I'm not sure just exactly where I was born," writes Sylvia. "The story goes that Mother was on her way to the hospital. However, the boat was very late and I was very early. So, she didn't quite make it. I arrived on the government boat, as the army boat was called, somewhere between Fort Andrews and Boston – at sea, so to speak."

Youthful days

Sylvia's Once Upon an Island recreates her youthful days on Peddocks, from the joy of holiday celebrations to the sadness of watching young men walk off to World War I to the biting cold experienced while standing waiting for a boat to return the island children to the their homes after a winter's day at the Village School in Hull. The author offers the unique perspective of being an insider at an early twentieth century coastal artillery site. Through the book's pages one sees the old Hull to Boston steamers through the eyes of one who watched them pass by firsthand, meets the Italian prisoners of war that inhabited the island in World War II, and learns what the native islanders really felt about the endless stream of questions from historian, storyteller and regular island visitor Edward Rowe Snow.

Sylvia's love affair with the island stretches far beyond her eventual parting with it as her year-round home, following her marriage in 1938. She lives for some years on Peddocks through the warmer months, while forging a dancing career in New York the other half of the year. She watches Fort Andrews go from active to caretaker status, to active again for the Second World War to being sold as surplus military property. Yet although the soldiery sailed away, the civilian families remained. Then came the Metropolitan District Commission's purchase of the island in 1970 for $192,000, a price adjusted in an out-of-court settlement to $3.2 million thirteen years later.

Through all the land transactions, Sylvia kept up the family home as best she could, and observed the never-ending flow of political posturing, grandstanding and ultimate total neglect of the once beautiful buildings of Fort Andrew. "There were many plans over the years from different Metropolitan District Commissioners, but none as of yet that has come to fruition," she writes. "There have been a few building studies, but with budget cuts and island vandalism, the fort buildings have become dilapidated and unsafe to explore...the island has become its own living ghost and memories of days of yore."

Published by Cohasset's Hot House Press, Once Upon an Island falls neatly in place with other island memoirs such as Harold Jennings' "A Lighthouse Family," about growing up as the son of the Lovell's Island lighthouse keeper, and, to a lesser extent, "First Light," the collected letters of the mother and children of Boston Light's Norwood family, covering two decades of life on Little Brewster Island. Apart from certain sections of William M. "Doc" Bergan's sometimes-apocryphal "Old Nantasket," these books represent the only first-person accounts of life in and around the Hull peninsula during the early years of the 20th century.

As Matilda Sylvia passed away before the book wound its way through the editing and formatting process, her daughter Leslie, of Norwell, helped steer it to completion. Editor Sally Weltman expertly shuffled and collated Matilda's series of short sketches on island life into its final format. Former state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (whose husband knew Sylvia, because, as Murray says, "when I was young, you knew everyone, since towns such as Scituate, Hull, Hingham and Cohasset were small") gladly penned a postscript detailing her Statehouse fights on behalf of the rights of the island's long-time residents. The end result is a beautifully recounted, pleasing-to-the-reader's-eye life history of Peddocks Island in the 20th century, captured for all time.

"There is still the faint sounds of artillery in the breeze," says Sylvia, "as the men long ago practiced their marksmanship; the rattle of equipage on the horses and mules as they drew the caissons; the sound of the bugle calls for various activities; our grand flag as she would ripple on the wind and would be lowered at the end of a busy day. Also listen and you might hear the mournful sound of 'Taps' as the bugler announces the end of the day and night settles over Peddock's Island and a once magnificent Fort Andrews. For all of these memories, we give thanks."

The 5th Dimension brings stylish soul to Plymouth

Billy Davis, Jr., Ron Townson and Lamonte McLemore grew up together in St. Louis, Missouri, but went their separate ways in their teens; before each ended up in Los Angeles with hopes of making it in the music business — which they did as members of "The Fifth Dimension." With seven Grammy Awards and hits like "Up, Up and Away," "The Age of Aquarius/Let The Sunshine In," "Stoned Soul Picnic," and 'Wedding Bell Blues," the three men along with Marilyn McCoo and Florence LaRue formed one of the most stylish and soulful pop vocal groups of the 1960s and 1970s.

In 1975, real-life married couple Davis and McCoo departed to become a duet act. The group's original members last performed together over a decade ago. Towson retired in 1998 and died in 2001, so it has been left to LaRue and McLemore — the only original members never to leave "The Fifth Dimension" — to sustain the group over the decades.

The pair will continue that tradition when "The Fifth Dimension" comes to Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street in Plymouth, for a 7:30 p.m. show on Saturday. For tickets and information, call 866-468-7619 or visit www.plymouthmemorialhall.com.

Breaking down senior stereotypes

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The terms "senior citizen" and "elderly" don't seem to fit today's active older generation.

"I wish I had a fun name for seniors – a term everyone likes," said Scituate Council on Aging director Joan Wright. "Some older people don't like to be called by those terms because of the frail, dependent perception often associated with them."

In sharp contrast to such stereotypes, Wright points to Scituate's three-year-old senior softball league. "It started out with 20 men and now there are about 120," she said. "These men could run laps around me in a heartbeat they're in such great shape. We also have a couple of folks who are actively involved here who are in their 90s. I don't have their energy and I'm a lot younger. It's all in your perspective."

Depending on who is providing a particular service or discount, senior citizens are often considered to be individuals 55 and over, or in the case of the American Association of Retired Persons, 50 and up. Recruiting materials AARP sends to new 50-year-olds inspired Tom Paxton's song, "The Letter You Hate to Receive." Some senior citizens are refusing discounts because they feel that accepting them detracts from their younger self-image, while others welcome the savings.

Overall, long-held stereotypes of the "declining senior years" are being replaced with more appealing images. That's due in large part to the fact that today's seniors are eating more well-balanced meals and staying physically active, a major part of healthier lifestyles, which can lead to a more youthful and vigorous appearance.

"I think the image of seniors has changed," said Hingham Department of Elder Services Director Barbara Farnsworth. "Over the last 10 to 15 years, older people have been viewed as active, healthy consumers of society, in general because they often stay much more active in their later years, working longer and looking for more hobbies, even when they still have a job," she said. "Older citizens really do make an effort to stay more active these days for the health benefits."

For some, walking does the trick. Others do aerobics, strength training, yoga, and other types of exercise. The Hingham Senior Center even offers an exercise program for those with arthritis. "Chair yoga is a little more gentle than other forms of exercise," Farnsworth said. While some older citizens have physical conditions that make participation in certain activities difficult, others limit themselves, Wright notes.

"Life is a one-time gift and I'll be darned if I'm going to waste a minute of it. I try to learn or do something new every day."
Hingham resident
Shanna Nicholson

Before her recent retirement after 14 years as Hingham's Director of Elder Services, Sandra Kent suggested the word "senior" be replaced by other terms because "you just can't lump the people we serve, who range in age from 60 to 100, in one category. You can meet a youthful 80-year-old and an old 60-year-old. You're as young as you feel, in a manner of speaking. It's all about attitude and one's approach to life."

One gentleman suggested using "individuals in their late middle-age years" as an alternative term.

Shanna Nicholson, who is active at the Hingham Senior Center, doesn't mind being called a "senior citizen," but she has heard some others object to it. "I don't pay attention to the term, because I do what I want to do anyway, although some find it offensive and prefer the term 'elder,'" she said. "Life is a one-time gift and I'll be darned if I'm going to waste a minute of it. I try to learn or do something new every day."

Trustee of Reservations manager Mary Doherty leads a walk for seniors through World's End in Hingham.

The energetic and youthful Nicholson, whose father told her when she was a young girl to never ask anyone's age, has an adventurous spirit. "I've gotten a lot of flack when I've talked about doing some things, such as when I went sky diving," she said good-naturedly. "But I have so much that I want to do that I don't let anything stand in the way, even when people say, 'What, at your age? Are you crazy?' Age is nothing but a stupid number. If you sit around feeling sorry for yourself and dwelling on your aches and pains, you're not going to get much out of life."

One senior citizen found inspiration in Lewis Carroll's poem, "You are Old, Father William," which begins: "'You are old, Father William,' the young man said, 'And your hair has become very white; And yet you incessantly stand on your head – Do you think, at your age, it is right?'"

Farnsworth said a number of older citizens she's talked with also don't seem to mind the term "senior citizen," in large part due to lack of a better word – in short, they don't let the term get in their way. But none mind the transformation from jaded stereotypes about seniors to the realization that Senior Centers are overall serving a more active type of senior.

She further noted that many of today's active seniors expect to live a long while and aren't afraid to make some changes. "In the past, senior citizens were often hesitant to leave the houses they'd lived in for a long time, but now more are downsizing to meet their current needs or even building the dream house they never had," she said.

The Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs mostly serves a population from 75 years old up to age 94, according to Outreach Coordinator Carol Barrett. "What I'm seeing is people in their 90s interested in good diet and exercise habits who live a healthy and active life," she said. For example, a number of seniors in their 90s often participate in the CEA walking club at the high school. "We also have 90-year-olds who had a difficult time when they first started chair yoga but who are now wonderful at it."

The CEA also serves congregate meals and hosts holiday celebrations, which provide an opportunity to socialize and keep mentally active.

"Many of our elders do the serving and clean-up or volunteer in other ways at our center, too," Barrett said.

Work continues past retirement age for many

By Amanda Gontarz
AGONTARZ@CNC.COM

For those not near it, the idea of retirement tends to draw up images of daily golf outings, lunch dates with friends, winter trips to warm destinations, spending time with grandchildren and doing those leisurely things people never had enough time for when they were working.

But for many people the concept of those retirement years being filled with nothing but spare time has changed. More people are choosing to work past the age of 65, which for a long time was considered the age at which people retired from their careers.

Since 1999, the number of people age 65 and older working or looking for work has increased by half a million. According to the U.S. Administration on Aging, 4.5 million seniors were working or actively looking for work in 2002, constituting 3.1 percent of the U.S. work force. Of this total, 1.9 million were women and almost 2.5 million were men. Three years before, 4 million older Americans working or seeking work made up 2.9 percent of the country's labor force.

Conducted by the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), a national study of 2,001 people between the ages of 50 and 70 who are working full or part-time showed that 46 percent of respondents planned to work into their 70s.

Ruth Dann first entered the workforce as a 13-year-old soda jerk. Now, at 74, she said she doesn't plan on quitting any time soon, as long as there is work available for her.

For the past eight years, Dann has worked 20 hours a week as a receptionist at the Marshfield Council on Aging.

"Working has really become a necessity now, but I enjoy it. I enjoy the people. I like working."
— Ruth Dann

"It pays for Blue Cross, pays some of the rent, some of the bills," she said. "I have some money for a little bit of fun, for clothes. Working has really become a necessity now, but I enjoy it. I enjoy the people. I like working."

She added that working is the "best solution" to keeping her feeling well both physically and mentally.

More than half of the respondents in the AARP's Working in Retirement study for 2003 said their retirement would include working for enjoyment, hosted a presentation on living an active and healthy life after retirement based on the findings of Longevity Researcher Dr. Thomas Perls, who did much of his research on centenarians who live quality lives.

"Dr. Perls talks about healthy diet, exercise, and having a purpose in life," Barrett said. "It's important to have something to do each day, whether getting together with family or baking a cake for someone's birthday. Dr. Perls also found that good medical care and no smoking or excessive drinking leads to a better and longer life."

Donald Young of Scituate takes a swing during a senior men's softball game.

Many senior centers also offer flu clinics, free legal advice, and other information on a variety of subjects.

Key to keeping seniors happy, though, Barrett said, is finding ways to enable them to remain in the towns where they've spent many years. "Statistics show people want to continue living in their own communities," she said. "It's important for towns to focus on the changing housing needs of seniors by encouraging developers to help elders remain an active part of their communities."

Wright sees the senior years as something to look forward to. "You don't have to follow convention or work full-time. Now's the chance to develop interests you've had to put on the back burner before because you were too busy rushing through life," she said. "Seniors can choose to look at their later years as ones of decline or an opportunity to do some of the fun stuff they always wanted to do but couldn't find the time."

not money. On the other hand, 42 percent said they would be doing some sort of work to help pay the bills.

For Dann, working part-time not only helps financially, but it also affords her plenty of time to do the things she loves, including spending time with the man in her life — her great-grandson. The Kingston resident said she also likes to write and hopes to get a computer to type up her journal. She has been writing an autobiography, not to publish, but to share with her family.

Dann's position at the Marshfield COA came through the Old Colony Planning Council, a Brockton-based organization that provides a variety of services to seniors.

As the Area Agency on Aging for 23 communities in southeastern Massachusetts, the Old Colony Planning Council serves a number of South Shore towns, from Marshfield and Kingston to Rockland and Abington. Through its senior aide employment training program, the council places seniors in a variety of subsidized public service positions, such as with Councils on Aging and housing authorities, for a maximum of two years.

In 2002, the guidelines of the senior aide training program changed, placing a maximum time period on a senior's employment in one place. Dann began working at the Marshfield COA through the planning council before the two-year limit was imposed.

"It is to be looked at as a training program, not as subsidized employment," said Patrick Hamilton, the council's Area on Aging Administrator. The Area on Aging helps local Councils on Aging with supportive services.

The program was designed to aid seniors in finding a position on their own by giving them a period of time to learn skills and train for another job.

"They sometimes don't have the necessary skills that are transferable to the kinds of positions that are available right now," Hamilton said. "Some have limitations in regards to travel or the type of work they can do, such as standing or lifting. That concerns a lot of them."

Almost 70 percent of respondents to the AARP study said they never intend to never retire or at least work part-time during retirement. Twenty-nine percent said they had no plans to work for pay after retirement.

Of those who intend to work in their senior years, more than a quarter of the respondents said their definition of retirement included having the opportunity to leave their job to try a different type of work.

Morgan "Skip" Dykstar had planned to work for at least five more years at Kraft Foods. After being with the company for 33 years, he was offered an early retirement package almost two years ago after the corporation bought out Nabisco.

More than half of the respondents in the AARP's Working in Retirement study for 2003 said their retirement would include working for enjoyment, not money. On the other hand, 42 percent said they would be doing some sort of work to help pay the bills.

"There was a lot of transitioning happening," he said. "I really enjoyed my job, but the package was good and you never know if the offer is going to come back again."

At the age of 57, Dykstar retired from his position as an account executive and immediately jumped into a new career, doing something completely different as the community involvement coordinator for 10 local Wal-Mart stores.

"I knew I'd get another job after I retired," he said. "I knew what I wanted to do. I have different goals than before. I didn't want the pressure of my previous job. Corporations are willing to pay, but they're expecting their employees to produce and that pressure is increasing.... Now, you're no longer some kind of prisoner to the job. You're less worried about not getting a raise or losing your job."

Though he could have survived with his retirement package from Kraft, Dykstar said it would have meant a change in lifestyle.

"It's never as much as you're used to living on," said the Boston native. "Living off my retirement would have meant giving up things I enjoy — the theater, fine dining, a nice car, vacations. I'm bringing in some money and maintaining the lifestyle I had. I'm working, but I get to help people through it. I've got the best of both worlds."

While he was with Kraft, Dykstar worked in coordination with Wal-Mart, organizing golf tournaments and other fundraisers. Dykstar was speaking at a Wal-Mart management meeting and mentioned he was retiring from Kraft. After that announcement, a district manager asked Dykstar if he would come to work for Wal-Mart.

"They created a position for me," he said. "It was based on something that already existed, that good relationship and trust I had created with them over the years."

His responsibilities started in the Weymouth store on Route 53, but since have grown to encompass 10 stores. Expanding his position locally is fine with Dykstar, but he doesn't expect or want his position to be promoted to a national level. Happy with what he's doing, Dykstar, who'll turn 59 in a few months, said he has no plans to stop working by the age of 65.

"I don't like to be idle," he said. "It's not what life is about. I don't want to run out of things to do. I love having people around and working with them. I have no intention of leaving."

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, people age 55 and older will make up 17 percent of the U.S. work force by the year 2010. That number is expected to rise 2 percent by 2050.

In the past few years, Dykstar has helped the Weymouth Wal-Mart and other locations raise hundreds of thousands of dollars for local programs, charities and organizations. For Dykstar, it is the opportunity to work with others and accomplish goals as a team that's the draw of the job.

"I may have an idea, but everybody's a part of it," he said. "We all come together to get it done. This job is all together different from my other one, but it's more rewarding. I'm helping someone."

Dykstar points to a photo of two smiling children. Years ago, those children were confined to wheelchairs, but because of the money raised by Dykstar and Wal-Mart, the two boys are able to walk like any other child their age.

"That's what it's all about," he said. "That's why I do this."

Esther scales off 80 pounds in eight months

By Cathy Conley
CCONLEY@CNC.COM

Who was that lovely lady in the1920s bathing suit complete with ruffled cap, bloomer knickers, bright red rouge on her cheeks and a long blond wig that won the Halloween contest at the senior citizen complex last year?

It was Esther Savoie.

Three years ago, Esther would not have been making waves at a Halloween contest.

She would have been sitting in a corner dressed in a smock and drawstring pants trying to cover her 225 pound girth.

"My friends would say — 'Get out of the way, here comes Esther' as I power walked through the corridors."
— Esther Savoie

But three years ago, in October, 2000, Esther's doctor said her cholesterol was sky high and, after years of trying to get her to lose weight, he was putting her on a low cholesterol diet.

"I decided to lose weight on my own," she said.

And the 5-foot-4, 74-year-old mother, grandmother and great-grandmother shed 80 pounds in eight months and has kept the weight off for more than two years.

"I was 115 pounds when I got married," she said. "But with my first child I gained a huge amount of weight and then just added to it with the next three," she said.

Esther and her husband of 51 years Leonard, a retired shipyard worker, had four children. Their youngest son was killed by a truck while hitchhiking on the highway when he was 19.

"I just kept packing on the weight. I like to cook and I like to eat what I cook. And I made sure I cleaned the plates of what my children didn't eat," she said.

Esther Savoie at 225 pounds.

Once Esther made up her mind about losing weight, there was no stopping her. "I don't even know where the motivation came from," she said.

She started with a cabbage soup diet.

First day just cabbage soup, second day cabbage soup and a fruit, third day cabbage soup and a vegetable, fourth day cabbage soup and a fruit and a vegetable, fifth day cabbage soup and bananas, sixth day cabbage soup and a tiny piece of meat, then the cycle started all over again.

Esther lost 20 pounds in a month, going from 225 to 205. But she was all cabbaged out.

So she decided to try Weight Watchers, a program in which every bit of food or drink has a point value. The dieter has a numerical maximum each day and keeps meticulous records of everything eaten in a 24-hour period. Exercise adds points to the maximum points allowed.

Esther lost weight slowly at first, a pound one day, a half pound the next. Some days she even gained a pound. But for eight months she was a fanatic point-counter. She never wavered.

Dieters earn gold stars each time they weigh in if they lost weight.

Esther's book rivaled a clear night sky, star after star after star.

At the same time, the retired warehouse worker who had never exercised in her life, decided to start a physical fitness regime.

She began by walking the hallway in one wing of the senior citizen high rise where she lives on Bicknell Street in Quincy.

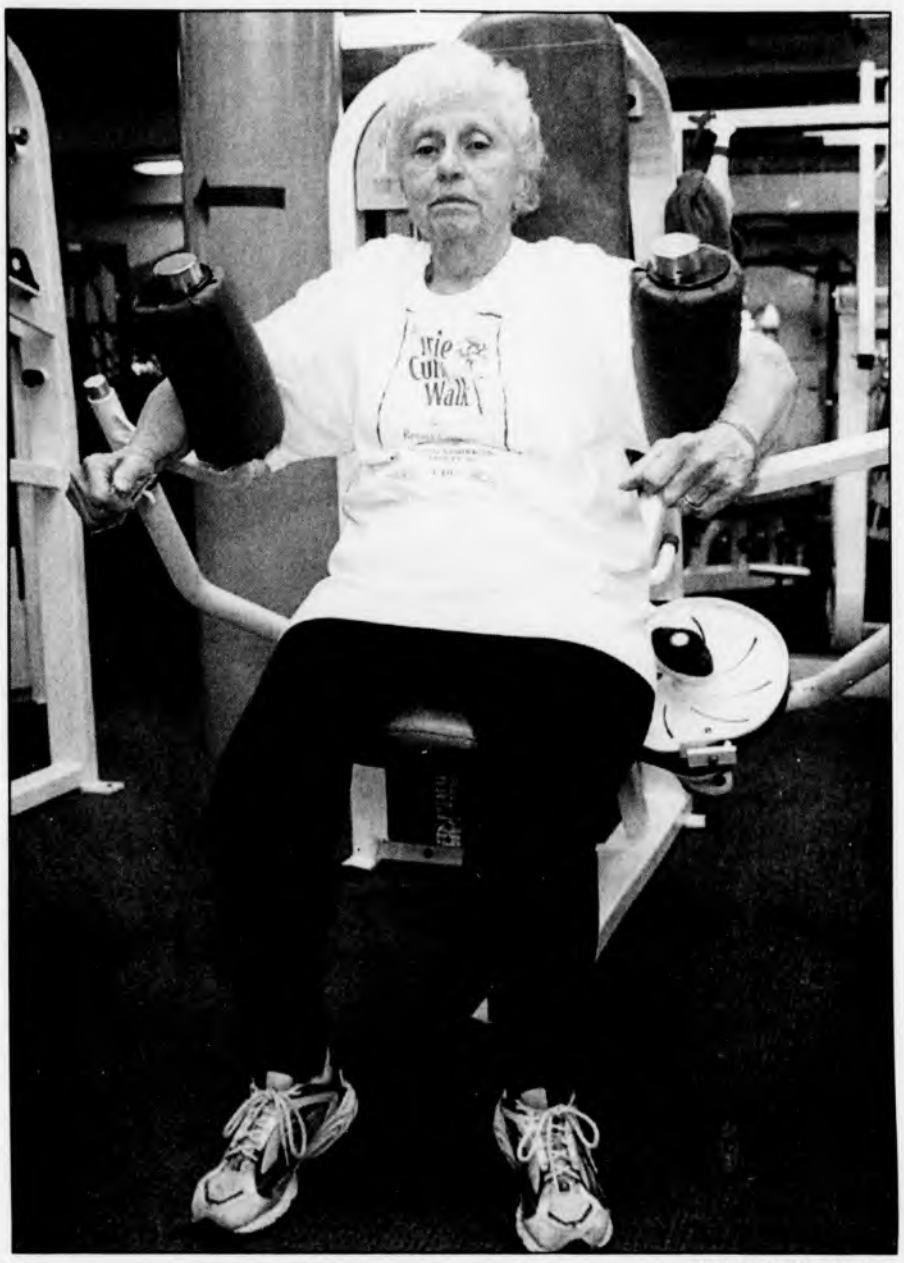
"I could barely make it down the corridor," she said.

But, little by little, she became comfortable walking the corridor of one wing. She added the corridor of a second wing, then a third. She built herself up to walking the three wings five times every day — a total of one mile. Then she added the same one-mile walk after supper.

"My friends would say — 'Get out of the way, here comes Esther' as I power walked through the corridors," she said.

She became part of a study at the Quincy YMCA which measured muscle and fat content. Being at the Y for the study, she became interested in the exercise equipment.

At 71, she joined the Y and again, little by little, has built up a physical fitness regime that would test the mettle of a New England Patriot —one and a half hours every day doing the nautilus, the rowing machine, the treadmill and the bicycle.



STAFF PHOTO/TOM GORMAN

Esther Savoie uses the rowing machine at the Quincy YMCA during her physical fitness regime which helped her lose 80 pounds in eight months.

"My husband didn't think I'd keep it up."

But she did.

The pounds melted away like snow in the noonday sun.

On June 21, 2001, Esther reached her goal of 144 pounds.

Her cholesterol was perfect. Her doctor told her to throw away the blood pressure pills she had been taking for 12 years. "I felt great. I had so much more energy," she said.

She began dancing again. At a surprise 50th anniversary party, she and Leonard did a special rendition of "Sweet Caroline" that her husband had taught her for their wedding a half century ago.

Into the trash bin went 45 years worth of smocks and drawstring pants.

She bought a whole new wardrobe.

For a New Year's Eve party last year, she wore a gold lamé top and long black skirt. Size 10.

Seniors invited back to school

Wampatuck 'tea' steeped in tradition

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

While talking with her father about her new job, Debbie Donovan noticed that he appeared extremely surprised about some of the things she told him regarding the Wampatuck School and the changing tide of elementary school education. A lot had changed, it seemed, in the many years since he had been a student. Prompted by his queries, Donovan invited her father to visit the school to see what a modern elementary school is all about.

That was in 1995 — Donovan's first year as Wampatuck's principal — and what began as an intra-family inspiration has grown to become an autumn tradition at Wampatuck: the grandparent/special friend tea.

According to Donovan, the annual Sunday event is an opportunity for grandparents to visit Wampatuck and get an insider's look at the elementary schools they're now two generations removed from. During the day, the school's students, grades K-6, serve as tour guides and lead their parents' parents around the school to show them their books, their desks, and their school.

In September, Scituate's Wampatuck Elementary School hosted its annual grandparents and special friends tea, where students proudly lead their grandparents or special friends on a guided tour of their classroom, desks, and school. Principal Debbie Donovan, (pictured top right) has been hosting the annual event since she became Wampatuck's principal in 1995.

According to Donovan, elementary schools including Wampatuck usually host an open house at the beginning of a new school year, and it's most often attended by students' parents. Grandparents, however, are often left out of the loop.

"We do have an obligation to educate our seniors," Donovan said. "Schools today are not the same as when they went to school."

"It makes sense to invite them back," she said.

This year, the event was held in September and Donovan took on the role of grandparent-greeter at the door to welcome in the 200 grandparents, children, and special friends who came out for the event.

Fun, friends, and feather boas

By Samantha Brown

Scituate Red Hatters, including Queen Mother of the "Meeting House Roses," Lorraine Quinn (center), enjoy friendship and festivity at a society luncheon.

It began with one simple poem and has spread like wildfire across the country. In almost every town on the South Shore, women of the 50-plus crowd are donning their red hats, purple outfits, and feather boas, ready to take on the world. The Red Hat Society is all about fun, and the women who participate know how to have it.

The Red Hat Society has its roots in California, where founder Sue Ellen Cooper lives. Taking a cue from a poem titled "Warning" which begins, "When I am an old woman..." and makes reference to wearing a purple dress with a red hat, "which doesn't go and doesn't suit me," she became inspired to start a club where women would meet wearing just that for various social events. The trend caught on and chapters have spread all the way to the East Coast.

While the Society is intended for women who are 50 or older, an exception can be made for those who are "under-age" and would like to join. However, those who are under 50 are not entitled to wear purple and red, and must wear a lavender outfit and pink hat until they have earned the right to wear the bolder colors.

"I am a lover of purple and fun," said "Queen Mother" Jeanne Murphy, who began the Hingham chapter, "Viva Vermillion." Only one week after officially registering, she went from a possible five or six interested members to more than 20. "It just exploded," she said.

Murphy is a member of a tennis team called the "Dirty Dozen" which has been meeting once a week for many years from May through October. Right after signing up to start her own chapter, Murphy said she met with her tennis group to find two other women wearing Red Hat Society shirts. When she told her friends she was starting a chapter in Hingham, they said they'd love to join. Before she knew it, every one of her tennis buddies said they wanted to join, and an instant chapter was born.

"It's a great group of people," she said.

In fact, the inaugural event for their chapter will be a Halloween Gala, which the tennis group holds every year, and will now incorporate the Red Hat theme. Everyone must not only wear a Halloween costume, they must wear their red hat too.

Grace Barlow and Shirle Shea are dressed to the nines for a Red Hat Society outing.

Murphy said since starting her chapter, she has encountered other members wherever she goes. Recently, she attended a memorial service and the woman giving the eulogy placed a red hat and a feather boa on the casket at the end of the service.

"I had no idea this thing was so huge," Murphy said.

When Murphy approached the woman afterward to ask her about the Red Hat Society connection, she mentioned she was starting a new chapter in Hingham, to which the woman said, "Well, I'm in."

Murphy said she and her group have been discussing attending the third annual Red Hat Society Convention, which will be held April 2004 in Dallas, Texas. Other possible outings for the future include tea at the mansions in Newport, R.I., visiting friends in Florida, and maybe visiting a ranch in Texas while attending the convention.

Members of the "Scituate Red Hat Society" aren't planning any trips to Dallas, but have thought about planning a cruise. However, their group has had so much success, that it has almost 80 members.

"Moving 70 people around is difficult," said Queen Mother Kathy Asmar, so her chapter has broken itself down into two sub-chapters to make planning easier. Now, Scituate not only has the "Scituate Red Hat Society," which began the trend, but its offshoot chapters, the "Red Hot Mermaids," and the "Meeting House Roses."

So far, she said the individual groups, whose members often mix depending on the activity planned, have gone on Duck Tours with one of the Weymouth chapters, a train ride along Lake Winnipesaukee, and will see a Showstoppers performance of "I love you, you're perfect, now change," at the Barker Tavern in Scituate, with some Marshfield Red Hatters. Asmar said she sends out a newsletter every couple of months to all 80 members to keep them informed of any new outings planned.

Grace Barlow and Mary Ward relax by the fire during a Red Hat Society luncheon.

Lorraine Quinn has taken over as the Queen Mother of the "Meeting House Roses," one of the Scituate offshoots, and said her smaller group has been working out well because most of the members are her neighbors. Quinn lives in the Meeting House Estates senior condominiums, and the close proximity of all the women provided an easy way to start their chapter.

Quinn goes on outings with her own group, in addition to those offered through the larger group.

"There are lots of places to go," she said, adding plans for going to dinner and the theater are at the top of the list. "We all have our red hats ready to take off!"

Recently, Quinn attended a Red Hat Society luncheon at Atlantica in Cohasset, and, as with every Red Hat activity, everyone dressed completely in Red Hat regalia.

"Of course, a lot of people were wondering what we were doing, but it was wonderful," she said.

Because Cohasset doesn't have a chapter of its own just yet, residents of the town may not be familiar with the sight of a gaggle of girls in their red hats and feather boas. However, the town won't have to wait much longer, as plans for a Cohasset chapter are already in the works.

Gracie Thompson said she will serve as Queen Mother for the first Cohasset chapter, which she hopes to have up and running sometime in November.

"I've got my red hat already, and my purple suit," she said, and now it's just a matter of getting a group together. Thompson said her chapter will be open to anyone who would like to join, whether they are from Cohasset or not.

"You meet new and different people when you open it up to new people," she said.

But the Red Hat Society isn't just all about fun, it's also about giving back to the community. The Marshfield chapters are a shining example. Queen Mother Carol Stone said while her 150 members are always up for fun, they do many fund raising events throughout the year, with proceeds going to the Marshfield Council on Aging boosters.

"Life is short and I want to give back," she said.

Because she has so many members, Stone has split her Red Hatters into two chapters, the "Marshfield Red Devils," and the "Marshfield Mermaids." She said her chapter began because she was looking for a fun theme for the lunch program at the Council on Aging, where she works as a nutrition site manager. After looking up "hats" on the Internet, she came across the Red Hat Society, thought starting a chapter might be a fun thing, and decided to hold a tea for anyone interested.

"I expected 25, and 82 showed up!" she said, and she couldn't believe how fast it caught on. Now that the one year renewal is coming up for her chapter, she's holding another tea for members wishing to stay in the program. However, she said she's been getting phone calls every day, not only for those interested in renewing, but from women who want to join.

"I'll probably have two more chapters by the time the tea is over," she said.

Other events planned in Marshfield include a variety show, which will tentatively take place Jan. 4. Stone said participants have been practicing since August and she's amazed at the dedication they have.

"They're 80 years old and dance to 'Hot, Hot, Hot.' These women are remarkable," she said.

But Stone also notices how important the bonding of members is, especially since many of them have lost their husbands and may live alone.

"I'm seeing women at the age where they're widows, and they're finding friends and bonding," she said, adding she gets so much joy from seeing their happy faces.

But the bottom line is, no matter what your age, there is still room to have fun, and that is what the Red Hat Society is all about. Having a good sense of humor and a sense of adventure can make anyone feel young at heart again, no matter what their chronological age.

"It's better than staying at home doing nothing," Quinn joked.

Senior advocate smoothes elders' way

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Who knows the needs of senior citizens better than another senior?

Today's 50-plus set is healthier and better educated than ever before. Senior citizens are increasingly active in advocating for better lives for themselves and their fellow "evergreens" (as elders are called in Scandinavia).

"The senior population has been a driving force in advocating to regain programs and level funding in the state budget," said Susan DiTullio, Weymouth's director of elder affairs. "Governor Romney proposed the elimination of prescription advantage, and seniors were on the phones and writing emails to their representative and area aging networks to seek their support. They made themselves heard and prescription advantage was reinstated."

How vigorously seniors reach out to help is indicated by a recent AARP survey that reported those over 50 are virtually the backbone of American volunteerism: there are 28 million senior citizen volunteers, making up about half of the country's volunteer force. While there are no readily available statistics on what percentage of these millions of seniors regard themselves as advocates for their peers, every community can point with pride to an evergreen who is making the way smoother for other seniors.

One example is a Weymouth senior who successfully completed a year-and-a-half-long campaign to have a sidewalk installed along heavily-traveled Route 18 in front of her Main Street condominium complex.

Many seniors live in Gaslight Village, outside South Weymouth Square, next to Pleasant Mall, and neighboring Fountain Lane Condominiums.

Because the mall is a short walk away, it is a favorite destination for seniors in the two complexes. There is a supermarket, restaurant, card shop, coffee shop, an optical company, and a hairdresser, among other businesses.

Yet the journey to the mall is very difficult for seniors at Fountain Lane, who have to navigate an unpaved stretch of dirt, grass, and rocks before reaching where the sidewalk in front of Gaslight Village begins. Once on the asphalt, the rest of the walk isn't bad. But reaching the sidewalk in the first place is no cake walk.

"The elderly have a difficult time as it is, without adding hindrances," said Anne Sullivan, 85, who lives at the Fountains. "Some seniors are encumbered. They have canes, they have walkers. They can't walk on the stones, so they walk on Route 18 near the curb."

Last year, a couple, also living at the Fountains, attempted to get a sidewalk put in, but nothing came of it.

Then Sullivan stepped in.

"I'm used to helping people out."
Anne Sullivan, 85, advocate

"That's when I put my two cents in," Sullivan said. "Nobody had anything to do with it but me."

In January, 2002, Sullivan circulated a petition supporting the need for a sidewalk in front of the Fountains. Then she followed up by making an appointment with Mayor David Madden. At first Madden said there was no money in the budget for a sidewalk. So Sullivan made another appointment, bringing home the message that the elderly walking in the street to get to the mall were at risk for an accident.

"For a while, it was back and forth, back and forth," Sullivan said.

Then, a little more than a week ago, the phone rang in Sullivan's condominium. It was the mayor, saying he had been successful in getting the necessary approvals for the sidewalk to be constructed.

Work is now underway, and the sidewalk should be completed by the end of the month.

Anne Sullivan stood her ground and advocated for a sidewalk near her condo complex in Weymouth.

"If they had given me $1 million, I couldn't have been more thrilled. I've had a lot of people thank me. It took me a year, but I never gave up," Sullivan said. "I made up my mind to do it, and I did it."

Enriching the lives of those around her is nothing new to Sullivan.

"I'm used to helping people out," she said.

Sullivan's husband, Daniel Edward Sullivan, who died seven years ago, spent his retirement years sharing his love of art with the elderly.

"My husband was so gifted," Sullivan said. "He taught painting for 25 years through the Rhode Island Council on the Arts, taking care of 200 seniors in eight classes all over the state. He was one in a million. He had a wonderful sense of humor. Not only did he teach them art, he kept them in stitches."

She set up all the exhibits of his students' paintings by herself.

When her husband died seven years ago, his former students presented Sullivan with a lovely collection of porcelain dolls as a remembrance.

Nowadays, Sullivan keeps very busy, going to the movies, visiting with her daughter who lives in Cohasset, and taking day trips. For three years, she volunteered her time at The Cottage Gift Shop at South Shore Hospital.

"They said I was the best saleswoman they ever had," Sullivan said.

What keeps Sullivan working so hard as an advocate for making the lives of seniors a little easier?

It is the end result, achieving something that helps others.

Madden should be prepared to have a place on his appointment calendar for Sullivan as the holiday season approaches, when great-aunts and great-uncles and grandparents send out greeting cards and letters in droves.

There is no mailbox at the Fountains. Yet.

"That is a big issue to me," Sullivan said. "I'm going to go for a mailbox up here. We've never had one."

Area councils on aging offer many services to help seniors tone their advocacy skills.

"Weymouth Elder Services, a division of municipal government, provides resources for promoting the physical, social, emotional and financial well being of elders so that they can continue to live independently," DiTullio said. "Weymouth Elder Services offers a myriad of services to accomplish this goal and we urge seniors to contact us to inquire as to how we may assist them, either with insurance counseling, transportation, wellness seminars, exercise classes and much more."

The voices of elder advocates will soon increase by many decibels. There are 76 million baby boomers nearing retirement age.

"The 'baby boomers' will arrive in 2006 demanding more services and we need to by ready," DiTullio said.

Driving isn't only a senior issue

By Robert Aicardi
BAICARDI@CNC.COM

Barbara Farnsworth, Hingham's director of elder services, doesn't mince words when the sensitive topic of seniors and whether they should be driving is brought up.

"I don't think that driving is just a senior issue," she said. "Good driving is an issue that transcends all generations."

Many seniors Farnsworth knows are still driving.

"The majority of the ones who come to the Hingham Senior Center drive," she said.

Based on her own experience, Farnsworth can appreciate what driving means to seniors.

"I know what it's like when my car is in the shop for a day or two," she said. "Having to rely on other people for a ride is difficult."

Statistics demonstrate the significance of the situation.

There are nearly 25 million people 70 years and older in the United States. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Commission, this age group makes up approximately nine percent of the total population, but annually accounts for close to 14 percent of traffic fatalities and around 18 percent of pedestrian deaths..

Some experts believe that there is a need to help seniors recognize their changing abilities and adjust their driving practices accordingly.

Others think that it's necessary to identify and regulate older drivers with diminishing abilities who can't or won't voluntarily change their driving habits.

In Ocean County, New Jersey, a senior task force has been in existence for about a decade which promotes defensive driving and reinforces the need for such design improvements as larger letters, bigger signs, and reflective materials. This effort is being expanded to other counties in the state.

Farnsworth pointed out that the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) offers a refresher course for senior drivers.

John Polio, 80, behind the wheel.

"From what I've seen, it gives people a lot of useful tips," she said.

John Polio, 80, who retired as Braintree's police chief in 1987, now serves as chairman of the town's Council on Aging.

"I enjoy driving," he said. "I don't feel as though I have anything that impedes the way I operate."

Polio acknowledged, however, that driving is "a delicate subject" for seniors.

"When talking about physical changes, we all know that we slow down, but we should remember that changes can happen to anyone at any time," he said. "It doesn't matter how old you are."

Polio emphasized that many factors become involved, including depth perception.

"I can remember when they gave us depth perception tests, but I don't think they do it any more," he said. "Hopefully, we're aware of that and are more vigilant when we're on the road. Having these things in mind, you can drive more carefully."

To Polio, someone's age doesn't necessarily mean that he or she is either a good or a bad driver.

"Some people at 50 shouldn't be driving, and some 18-year-olds are excellent drivers," he said.

Asked how he feels about the idea of testing older drivers, Polio replied, "I don't think that you can do that. It would be rather irresponsible to act in a discriminatory way. If you start talking about testing, you should say that all drivers should be tested periodically, regardless of age."

Polio explained why he feels this way.

"Things happen to each of us that could impair upon the way we operate a motor vehicle," he said. "The only way to find out is to test, but that may be too cumbersome and expensive. It would be folly to test only older drivers. I think that you'd really have to do it to everyone."

Polio has doubts about the feasibility of this.

'I don't know if you could authorize it through the legislative process, and I don't know if the Registry of Motor Vehicles could do it," he said. "Thought should be given to that area."

Testing for all would be the only way to avoid creating even the suggestion of discrimination, Polio argued.

"If you get a large portion of the public thinking that something is discriminatory, I don't think that it'll ever be done," he said. "If it's going to be even-handed, let's test everyone."

Poor driving, to Polio, is not a problem which deserves to be solely associated with seniors.

"Bad driving should not be put on to seniors as though they are a dangerous lot," he said. "For every well publicized incident of a senior getting into an accident, I can tell you about a young driver, on drugs or booze, running into a tree."

Polio regretted what he described as "a natural tendency to have a certain stereotype" about seniors.

"Yes, some seniors shouldn't be driving, but I could say that about some drivers in their 20s, 30s, 40s, and 50s," he said.

Polio agreed with what Farnsworth said about seniors and driving.

"With many seniors, driving is their last vestige of independence," he said. "It's a tough thing for family members to judge and make decisions about whether their father or grandfather should still be driving. That's why I feel that the fair way would be to test everyone."

Most of the seniors Polio knows continue to drive, including one who is 87 and one who is 92.

"They both drive their own cars, and they both go to our council's different functions on their own," he said. "There are also those who do call for rides, but that's a good thing."

Polio mentioned another key point.

"There are many people who call for rides but are much younger than those who drive," he said.

Realtors become senior specialists

By Paula Woodhull
PWOODHULL@CNC.COM

Today, an astounding 80 percent of senior citizens own real estate or are purchasing new property, according to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

Census figures show there are more than 4 million people in the U. S. who are 85 or older. By 2025, this number is expected to reach 10 million. And what all this means is that a whole range of services has been created to address the special real estate needs of seniors and tap into this growing market.

Senior citizens, and by most definitions that includes everyone over age 55, face major decisions about how and where they will live as they get older. Is it time to move to a retirement village, sell the house and buy a smaller condo, or move to an assisted living facility?

For those who decide to remain independent and live in their own homes, the challenges are significant. How to continue paying rising insurance costs and property taxes, are just a few.

Most communities offer services that help seniors stay in their own homes. Seniors get a reduction in their property tax bills, fuel assistance if they qualify, and many seniors can take advantage of outreach services such as Meals on Wheels and the "Are You OK" safety program offered by the Councils on Aging and police departments in their communities. All these programs help seniors maintain their independence and autonomy for as long as possible.

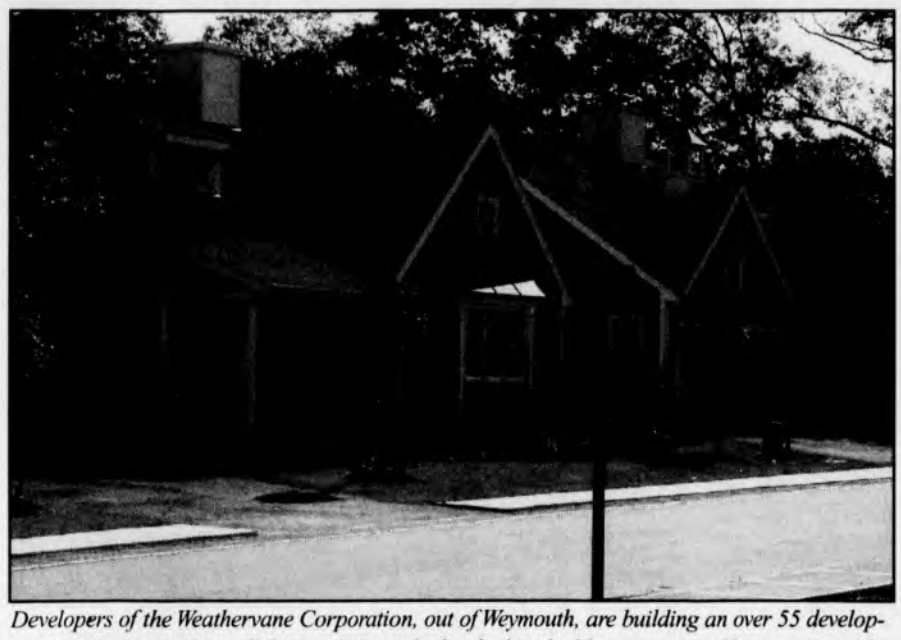
But for many seniors, there comes a moment when they realize it's time to sell the big home in which they've raised their families and have lived for years.

To meet this need, the MAR and a number of real estate companies are offering special training. The MAR in October offered realtors a Seniors Real Estate Specialist Course. The course helps real estate agents and brokers better address the special housing needs common to senior citizens. The seminars offer instruction about designing a home to fit the changing lifestyle of seniors, mortgage financing, and real estate counseling. Other issues include capital gains and the tax implications for seniors selling their home.

Realtors note that most older clients want a low-maintenance home and in many cases this calls for new construction. Senior citizens like the idea of an open floor plan with additional bedrooms for when older children and grandchildren come to visit. Two-levels are not highly desirable in new construction for seniors, Realtors say. And of course, a low maintenance lawn is a must.

In a previous interview with the Mariner about the real estate preferences of seniors, Pat Macauley of Curtis Real Estate in Quincy agreed that real estate companies and developers are finally starting to respond to the needs of senior citizens.

"It's one of the biggest changes in the industry in the past several years," she said. "The biggest challenge is that we need more housing for that group of people. I have several clients who want to sell their big family home. They can't find the right place to go to, though, and so they stay put."



Developers of the Weathervane Corporation, out of Weymouth, are building an over 55 development in Weymouth that will feature 119 single-family detached homes on a golf course. A similar proposal is being considered in Rockland on land owned by the YMCA.

As the baby boomer population ages, over-55 residential developments have sprung up all around the South Shore suburbs in Norwell, Scituate, Pembroke, Marshfield and Duxbury. In Quincy and Weymouth there are apartment complexes just for seniors.

Barbara Armstrong, a geriatric counselor in the Weymouth area, says there are new trends in senior housing. "There has been a lot of focus in the real estate industry on the active retirement-aged population and that's a good start."

Armstrong said seniors "need a place to live and they represent a totally untapped market. Of course, they will all have different needs and will all be at different places financially. But the fact that senior citizens are staying stronger and healthier longer emphasizes their need for housing beyond the nursing home."

Karen Bayha, a Realtor with Codlwell Banker's Marshfield office, is a local agent who has earned the seniors specialist designation. Bayha says the course enables real estate agents to help seniors make sound decisions about selling the family home, buying rental property, dealing with capital gains and tax implications of selling their home, obtaining a reverse mortgage to use the equity they have accumulated in their homes, and moving to a senior facility. She said the course has given her the knowledge and expertise she needs to work with seniors.

Debra Hagerty, a Realtor with Jack Conway & Co. in the Hull office, said senior citizens need extra special attention when they decide to sell their homes.

"They've been in their home for 40 years, in some cases," she said. Hagerty has completed the Conway Senior Real Estate Specialist Course and found it extremely helpful. "They don't know what to do and where to go. They've been in their home their entire life."

Hagerty said their are many emotional issues that can come into play. "There may be family members who get involved and don't want to sell. They are very emotionally attached to their house. It's a very tough move."

Realtors who complete the senior specialist course have at their fingertips a list of referral suggestions for attorneys, accountants, assisted living facilities, over-55 communities, and financial planners who are familiar with the real estate needs of seniors.

Hagerty said she approaches seniors with compassion because her own mother died a few years ago. The family kept their mother's home for a while in case she wanted to move back from Florida where she was living in an assisted care facility. "We couldn't just sell it out from under her."

Hagerty recalls one client, an 80-year-old woman who had lived in her sprawling home for decades. "The taxes and insurance were killing her." Active and fully responsible for herself, "she was an incredible senior," Hagerty said.

The elderly woman finally decided it was time to move to a smaller place, so she sold her house and bought a condo close to the center of town. "It made her life so much easier," said Hagerty. "I got her a little shopping cart. I get a Christmas card from her every year."

Long-term care 'not your typical insurance'

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

While long-term care insurance can prove to be a valuable investment for many senior citizens, the experts say people should read the fine print before buying such a policy.

"It isn't for everybody," said Chris Carroll Jr., president of the Norwell-based insurance company, Novidian Financial LLC.

The Web site Consumerlawpage.com explains in a nutshell what long-term care insurance is, stating, "As a result of a disability or a prolonged illness, long-term care is the assistance provided when a person is unable to provide for himself or herself. It ranges from providing personal care at home, such as bathing and dressing, to skilled nursing services in a nursing home."

Carroll said long-term care policies also typically cover services like respite and hospice care. However, he stressed each policy is different, noting you have to make sure you know what you're getting when you buy.

Carroll said there's usually two reasons why people buy long-term care policies — to make sure they get the care they need where they want it and also to protect one's assets.

Carroll said he got into selling long-term care after he saw what happened to his own grandmother. He explained his grandmother had a stroke in her 50s, which left her paralyzed on one side and unable to speak. He said his grandfather stepped up and took care of her at that time, but by the time his grandmother was about 70 years old, he said his grandfather passed away.

Carroll said his grandfather left his grandmother a lot of money and other assets, but soon, he said he had to move his grandmother to a nursing home in Cohasset because nobody was able to care for her anymore.

In order to pay for the nursing home care, many of the assets and much of the money Carroll's grandmother once had in her possession needed to be spent.

"Soon, all her assets were gone and she had spent down to just $2,000," Carroll said. "It was heartbreaking."

Carroll said it costs about $230 to $240 per day to stay at the average nursing home in Massachusetts.

"Let's say you have about $300,000 in assets and you're paying $240 per day for 365 days," he said, noting the average stay in a nursing home for someone is about two-and-a-half years. "That comes to about $87,600. How long do you think that $300,000 will last?"

When it comes to the options for paying for long-term care, Consumerlawpage.com states, "It comes from your cash and your assets, your family's assets and for those without assets it is paid by Medicaid programs administered by state government. More than half of nursing home bills are paid out-of-pocket by individuals and their families and somewhat less than half are paid by state Medicaid programs. Insurance, and that includes Medicare, Medicare supplemental insurance and health insurance provided by employers, does not pay for most long-term care expenses."

Carroll said Medicare will typically cover the first 100 days of nursing home care. If you have a long-term care policy, you're covered when Medicare stops paying. He said if you don't have a policy in place, after Medicare's payments expire, you have to spend down your assets until Medicaid kicks in, which is after you've basically spent down everything you've saved your whole life.

Carroll explained by buying a long-term care policy, you're basically buying something which will provide money for the daily cost of nursing home care or whatever type of care you've chosen within the policy. He explained if you have assets to protect, getting a long-term care policy will help you maintain them without spending everything you have.

Long-term care policies may be less appropriate for people who have limited assets to protect.

Carroll said people should start looking at buying long-term care around the age of 55. However, he noted as with all insurance, as you get older, the premiums for the policies can skyrocket. He added a long-term care policy may be one which the buyer may never need to use, even after shelling out the cash for hefty premiums.

There are many different policies to choose from when it comes to long-term care. People can choose how long their policies will cover nursing home/in-home care whether it's two years, three years, four years, five years, six years 10 years or for a lifetime.

When buying long-term care policies, people should look at inflation options. Those options allow you to let your benefit grow as the cost of nursing homes and other forms of care goes up. For instance, Carroll explained if a young person buys a long-term care policy, they would want to choose an inflation option because by the time that person needs the policy, the cost of nursing homes would be much higher. However, he said if a 70-year-old senior citizen bought the policy, it is likely no inflation option would be needed.

Inflation options and benefit period choices are just a few of the options offered under long-term care policies and Carroll stressed it is important to take all of these elements into account. When someone comes to him wanting to buy a long-term care policy, he usually suggests that person work with an estate planner or an attorney to make sure the policy is what that person wants.

"A lot of folks will say, 'I may never use this policy,'" Carroll said. "But that's a risk that comes with any type of insurance. The chances of your house burning down is not that good but still, many people have insurance for it. Nobody knows if they'll get into a car accident, but still, they have insurance for that."

Ed Flynn, executive director of South Shore Elder Services in Braintree, said he tells all senior citizens who ask him about long-

Seniors invited back to school

ents Susan and Carl Schleiff, were escorted throughout the school by their six-year-old granddaughter Olivia Higgins —a beaming 1st grader.

"She was very proud and showed us all over the whole school. It was lovely," said Susan.

Susan added she was amazed at some of the things she saw in her granddaughter's school — including a computer room with individual stations for each child in the class — accoutrements she said were a far cry from those in her elementary experience in Quincy more than 50 years ago.

"I thought the school was beautiful," she said, adding the interior rooms, halls, and walls were "immaculately clean."

"I noticed the class size," she added. "They're small, 15 or 16 in Olivia's class. That's terrific for both students and teachers."

For seven-time grandfather Paul Carroll, who completed elementary coursework more than six decades ago, this year's Wampatuck tea was his first.

Carroll was guided around the school by two of his grandchildren, first-grader Tess Malerbi and second-grader Caroline Smart —a young lady Carroll says has a fitting name for a student.

"They were enormously proud of their building, and their accomplishments," he said.

According to Carroll, the chalkboards have changed color, there's individual seating now, and overall today's classrooms are more "flexible."

"There's a genuine warm feeling in the school itself," he said.

As his grandchildren have several years left at Wampatuck, Carroll said he'll be happy to attend future grandparent teas.

"I'll be there with bells on," he said.

According to George Duggan, the students of Wampatuck are flourishing in a great environment.

"They've made great changes," he said, "changes for the better."

Duggan's very familiar with Wampatuck. As a former Wampatuck principal, he's been to more than one grandparent's tea.

Duggan, who has been retired for approximately 20 years, has three grandchildren at Wampatuck.

"Debbie Donovan's doing a super job in getting people into the school to show people what's going on," he said.

"I thought it was great to see the changes that have taken place in that building, and in education."

According to Duggan, however, some things have still remained the same.

"Some areas of the tile on the floor are the same as when I was there," he said.

According to Donovan, the grandparents' tea isn't the only connection the school offers to seniors .

Donovan said her students have taken part in letter-writing campaigns to seniors in nursing homes, and often visit them to sing during the holidays.

term care policies to be careful when deciding whether to buy such a policy.

"Some of the policies are good, but it depends what they cover," he said. "A lot of people buy these policies expecting they'll cover in-home care, but a lot of them don't cover that at all. People should really look into what the policy they are looking at covers. It's always good to have insurance for things, but you need to understand what you're getting.

"Exploring the idea of buying long-term care is not a bad idea. But if it's going to cost you thousands of dollars every month, it may not be worth it. But it really depends on the situation. When investigating a policy like this, the buyer really needs to work with someone other than the agent that's selling it."

Regarding the fact that people who buy them may never use their long-term care policies, Flynn said, "All insurance is based on risk."

Marshfield Council on Aging director Carol Connolly said buying a long-term care policy "is really an individualized thing. You have to evaluate your own situation."

She said the topic does come up in Marshfield from time to time.

"People have to be careful in terms of what the policies cover," she said. "Here, by the time many seniors are thinking about buying it, the cost is huge. Plus, there's a lot of things to consider when you're buying a long-term care policy. Sometimes, when people are told about it, they seem overwhelmed."

"People need to look at three different plans before they buy one," added Norwell Council on Aging director Rosemary O'Connor. "It's like getting an estimate on a house. It's just a good rule of thumb. I also tell people that they should never sign onto anything until they look at and understand the policy. With this kind of insurance, I think people are becoming more educated, consumer-wise.

"I'm not going to say long-term care is good or bad, you just need to know what you're buying."

"Everyone is different and as I said before, long-term care insurance is not for everyone," Carroll said. "This is not your typical insurance."

Collecting their thoughts

Seniors learn to share memories

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Among the first tidbits of advice seasoned writers will invariably offer to any that aspire to join their ranks is "write what you know."

This simple suggestion, coupled with the innate desire most people have to leave behind a lasting legacy, has given rise to an army of fledgling authors in the senior ranks.

"I don't know how exciting anyone would think my life has been, but I've enjoyed writing down my memoirs," said 90-year-old Ann Reardon of Hingham. "It's something I want to pass along to my family."

"I think it's important to remind younger people about how some things have changed, but also about how some things haven't," Carol Regan, 75 and also of Hingham, offered in the way of explanation for her new hobby.

Reardon and Regan are two of the many seniors who have been inspired to trade in the TV remote or knitting needles for a computer keyboard or pen and pad after taking a "Writing Workshop for Seniors" conducted earlier this year by published author Marc Widershien, of Boston.

"I've always enjoyed writing, but that workshop helped get me rolling," noted Regan, who grew up in Winthrop. "I think a lot of people have no sense of history, and where they came from. And I think that's sad."

This is an opinion very much shared by the 59-year-old Widershien – who three years ago published The Life of All Worlds, a lyrical 62-page collection of personal memoirs that was penned over a period of 28 years. The Boston native recalls that he first began recording his memories dating back to his boyhood after his father's death in 1972 and then endured his mother's urgings over the next few decades to get these published. He finally took the collection of memories to a publisher in 2000, three months after his mother passed away, and realized every writer's dream when the manuscript was purchased by the first publisher he brought it to, Ibbetson Street Press in Somerville.

The sense of fulfillment that came with not only writing The Life of All Worlds, but learning there was indeed a captive audience out there for personal observations and musings from a simpler time, compelled Widershien to help others find the same kind of fulfillment. And, thus, a teacher was born.

"I don't know how exciting anyone would think my life has been, but I've enjoyed writing down my memoirs. It's something I want to pass along to my family."

90-year-old Ann Reardon of Hingham

Of course, one of the first things you learn in talking to Widershien is that he considers himself anything but a teacher.

"I don't feel I'm really teaching them, but more like they're teaching me," said Widershien, who holds a doctorate in comparative literature from Boston University and has a wide experience in publishing poetry, translations, book reviews and articles.

"One of the things I like to say to the people who come to my workshops is 'if I want to learn about a computer, I go to a 10-year-old, but if I want wisdom, I go to my elders.' "

The author said it's sad more people don't share his view.

"In general, these people I've met are a lot sharper than the majority of the population. They see what's going on around them, and have a better perspective than most people give them credit for. It seems our grandparents have slowly become marginalized since the 1950s. Instead of patriarchizing or matriarchizing them, we've gone the exact opposite way."

Among the more important lessons Widershien says people can glean from older citizens is the sense of community.

"I think we've slowly become a nation of nomads rather than a nation of neighborhoods," he observed. "And that's why I think the time is ripe for literature of this kind. You're seeing a lot of books out there about personal memories from the 1950s and earlier, and these are the people who are writing them.

"There is definitely an interest out there."

In short, Widershien considers himself more of a facilitator than a teacher.

He notes that many of the people who attend his workshops do so even though they are convinced they cannot write. Widershien begins breaking down these notions by getting them to simply begin talking. All of his "students" are encouraged to bring tape recorders, and often all they do in that first session is talk. The writing springs from those recordings, with focus on detail and writing style coming in the following sessions.

"Any reasonably intelligent person can learn to write well," asserts Widershien in his written introduction to the course. "Yes, talent plays a role, but hard work makes up for every shortcoming. After over 40 years of writing, I am not even sure how to define talent. The closest I can come is eagerness. When we are curious about a subject, sometimes we become passionate about it. If you become passionate about writing, you will find that the message is embedded in your writing."

Judging by the numbers at his workshops, this message is getting through. Widershien has made more than 100 appearances at senior centers, libraries, bookstores and schools over the last few years, and is booked to more than 40 between now and the end of March.

Hingham Elderly Services Director Barbara Farnsworth said she was "very happy" to book Widershien for a Nov. 5 lecture and a three-part workshop set for Jan. 21, Feb. 11 and March 11 at the Hingham Senior Center, 224 Central St.

Ann Reardon with her book 'The Great Bicycle Expedition.'

Ann Reardon in 1938 (on another bicycle trip). She was working as a camp counselor in Vermont and was traveling to Concord, Massachusetts. She went to the train station with her bike and her suitcase. It was a nice day, so she put the suitcase on the train and rode her bike down instead.

after a very favorable response last winter.

"Dr.W. is an impressive and delightful teacher and person," stated Kay Amendalare at the conclusion of Widershien's Hingham workshop earlier this year. "He holds our interest from the first moment of class right until the last. He reminds us of the familiar and the unfamiliar, always pointing out the correct or incorrect in writing, then leaving us to choose without any sense of our being 'locked in to any way but our own.'"

"My heart is sad that our third and last class has come to an end," added Phyllis Davis. "Hopefully we will meet in 2004 for more uplifting hints that will encourage us to write."

Regan, who plans to sign up for Widershien's return engagement, claims that writing about her past has proven an extremely enriching experience on the whole, but notes it has not been without its bittersweet realizations.

"The world used to be a much happier place for children," noted the grandmother. "Kids used to roam all over their neighborhoods. I could walk to the beach or play outside with my friends well after dark under the streetlights. But you just don't see that anymore. It seems like everyone's afraid that someone or something will grab their kids. It's so bad now. It's almost like there's nothing that can be done to help it.

"And we used to be able to do a lot of fun things that didn't cost a lot of money, or even any at all. We'd play hopscotch or kickball, or just go to the beach. Nowadays, everything seems to have to come with a price tag. Why is that?"

Good question.

Reardon joked about her life not being very exciting, but a lot of people might not agree. The Hingham 90-year-old has penned a book detailing here bicycle trip through Europe prior to World War II. Although it's not a prominent point in the work, there are a few references in there to "dodging Nazis."

"We'd be staying in youth hostels here and there, and there were a lot of times we'd hear the Nazis going by in their tanks or Jeeps," Reardon recalled. "Once we even saw out our window that they came into the place we were staying with bayonets on their rifles. We didn't think they were coming looking for us or anything, and I think they were just stopping for a beer or something, but it was pretty exciting and scary."

Reardon also writes about staying at her uncle's house briefly in Germany. He was a staunch Nazi supporter, but his daughter, who was approximately Reardon's age, was an opponent of what that party was professing.

"That was an interesting household," noted Reardon.

Clearly, there aren't many people around who can lay claim to the kinds of memories and observations offered by these two Hingham women. And this is precisely what drives Widershien to do what he does.

"If we don't get these kinds of things down they could be lost for all time," he said. "As they say, you can't take it with you. History is an important thing to pass along too."

And Widershien said he feels blessed to have fallen into his role as facilitator.

"Believe me, I'm not getting rich off this. I feel extremely fortunate to be in a position to help these people. I walk out of these sessions feeling better than I did going in about 99 percent of the time."

ZBA files Avalon decision

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Woody Chittick, chairman of the Zoning Board of Appeals, talks like a man who wants to get something important off his chest.

While he recognizes the controversy that has swirled around the proposed, 200-unit AvalonBay apartment project off Route 3A for the better part of two years, he also is proud of how the ZBA tackled what could be the town's first — and perhaps only — 40B project.

"We were able to craft a set of conditions that protect the best interests of the town," he says, adding there could also be a net benefit by improved safety along 3A near Sohier Street.

Chapter 40B is the more than 30-year-old state affordable housing law that allows developers to skirt local zoning regulations in exchange for providing affordable housing in municipalities that fall below the 10 percent "affordability" threshold.

That means if a town has less than 10 percent of its total housing stock deemed affordable by state standards, it is vulnerable to "40B projects,"

Cook Estate, wires are likely to spark debate

Zoning articles also hot topics

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The fall Special Town Meeting is just around the corner and voters need to be prepared for what could be a long night of important decision making including the town's $4.5 million purchase of the Cook Estate for senior housing and whether to bury the wires in the village.

Town Moderator George Marlette said the meeting will start promptly at 7 p.m. on Monday Nov. 17, at the Cohasset High School Sullivan Gymnasium and the discussion will focus on 20 articles, which are items of business detailed in the Town Warrant mailed to all households. Extra Warrants will be available at the meeting as well as the Town Manager's recommended motions.

Special Town meeting will start promptly at 7 p.m. on Monday Nov. 17, at Cohasset High School's Sullivan Gymnasium.

A quorum of 100 registered voters is required before Town Meeting can get underway, but Marlette said that shouldn't be a problem as approximately 50 residents serve on town boards and will be there.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he "always hopes for a large crowd because the meeting is such an important part of town government."

While the annual Town Meeting is held on a Saturday, the fall Special Town Meeting is traditionally held on a Monday night. If all the articles cannot be tackled by 11 p.m., Town Meeting will be continued to a second night.

"I might extend for a half an hour or so," Marlette said, if the meeting could be adjourned in that timeframe, but at that point it really becomes a judgement call as to how much energy those in attendance have.

If the meeting is going to be continued, it will most likely carry over to Tuesday night, but the date can be changed on the floor of the meeting.

Marlette said he will be

When Herman Weltman goes to the movies, he sees his name in the credits. He attends premiers with celebrities and conducts promotional tours around the globe. But when the lights are off, the project's a wrap and he needs a vacation — there's still no place like Cohasset.

Weltman, who was nicknamed "Andy" during his college days, has been working on movies since the late 1980s. To date, he has worked on features such as "Dead Poet's Society," "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," and the "Perfect Storm." But for the past three years he has been working as associate producer for the upcoming Russell Crowe flick, "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World," which will open in theaters Nov. 14.

"I'm the first one on the movie set, and I'm the last one off," he joked. But as the right-hand man to director and producer Peter Weir — whom Weltman has worked with on four films including "Master and Commander"— Weltman

A hometown honors its veterans

SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

As U.S. troops are stationed around the globe fighting a war on terrorism, Veterans Day has taken on a new meaning for many families and friends of those who have sacrificed so much in the name of our country, and Cohasset is no exception.

"God bless this beautiful nation, the United States of America."
— Thomas Wigmore, Sons of the American Legion

With flags flying high on every side of the green at Cohasset's Veterans Memorial Park and "Amazing Grace" sounding from a loud speaker, a crowd of around 30 gathered Tuesday at a special ceremony held to honor veterans old and new.

Members of the American Legion presented the colors and everyone held their hands over their hearts as the Pledge of Allegiance was recited. Members saluted, and seemed to stand a little taller while the National Anthem played, while others in the crowd took out handkerchiefs. Some wore patriotic jackets or scarves, others held flags in their hands, but everyone held patriotism in their hearts.

Vote correction

The Advisory Committee voted down the allocation of $90,000 for repairs on the police and fire station by a majority vote of five to three. Last week's Mariner incorrectly reported the vote was unanimous and regrets the error.

Use of facilities

The School Committee approved a motion to impose a custodial fee for recreation groups or boosters who use facilities at any of the three Cohasset schools. Any group which uses the facilities will be responsible for providing their own monitor for the day, to ensure all rules are followed, such as no food or drink in the gymnasium areas and no wandering in the halls.

School Committee heads to conference

Members of the School Committee traveled to Worcester this week to attend the annual joint conference between the Massachusetts Association of School Committees and Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents.

Each year during the three-day conference, the MASC Delegate Assembly is held, and resolutions to the MASC bylaws are considered, with legislation often filed as a result. Pat Martin is serving as the Cohasset representative.

Of very high importance to Cohasset is a charter school moratorium. Because towns are held financially accountable for the public schooling of its children, which includes footing the bill for those who opt to attend charter schools, many communities have been having financial trouble in their public schools. In Cohasset, charter school tuition ranges from between $7,000 and $8,000 per student, not including what the town must pay for transportation for those students.

Another resolution will reaffirm the position of the MASC that state officials should suspend the MCAS test as a graduation requirement until critical issues with the test have been addressed. The MASC feels a variety of assessments need to be made for students, to ensure one single test doesn't determine the student's fate. In addition, the length of the test and the time it takes away from "teaching learning." Another weak area is the fact that the test cannot effectively analyze the skills of students with special circumstances such as a disability or limited English proficiency.

Another resolution deals with the licensing requirements for superintendents, and would require a minimum of a master's degree for vocational school superintendents and assistant superintendents and still another would support initiatives to stop cuts in local aid, education, and health and human services.

Resolution six is dubbed the "No Child Left Behind" act, and would support the latest reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, which endorses the goal that all students be proficient in critical academic areas by the year 2014.

Resolution seven deals with Medicaid Revenues and would direct Medicaid dollars received for special education students to the school departments of cities and towns rather than go the general funds of the communities.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

ZBA files Avalon decision which usually include higher-density housing than a town might otherwise allow. Currently Cohasset has about 2,700 households per the 200 census and only 76 units of affordable housing.

Chittick says the 50 Avalon units will help keep people who live in Cohasset in town and enable people who work in Cohasset to live in town.

The much-anticipated Zoning Board of Appeals decision issuing a comprehensive permit to the 200-unit Avalon apartment off 3A is now on file at the Town Clerk's office.

The 16-page decision includes 31 conditions that the developer must meet for the project to go forward including obtaining a ground-water discharge permit from the state Department of Environmental Protection.

If Avalon gets a ground-water discharge permit from the DEP for its septic system, and survives anticipated appeals to the ZBA decision, Avalon would be the town's first 40-B project, as two others filed in the late 1980s did not go forward. It would also remove the town from the threat of further 40B projects until at least, the next US census comes out in 2011, when the number of households in town could be adjusted, Chittick says.

That's because the state counts all units in a rental 40B complex toward a town's affordable housing stock even though, in Avalon's case only 25 percent (or 50 units) are actually affordable to those making 80 percent of the median income in the greater Boston area. All rental units are counted because the state recognizes the dire need for rental housing.

Chittick explains the reason the decision took two weeks to be finalized after the close of deliberations was to have "legally vetted" some of the conditions including how to handle issues that are subject to the approval of the Massachusetts Highway Department.

He is optimistic the project will survive any appeals and move ahead.

"I am very confident given the 40-B law," he says.

While those conditions, such as Route 3A sidewalks and a traffic signal, are strongly recommended — if MassHighway should say "no," Avalon is not off the hook, so to speak and must still provide some compensation for the town to use at its discretion.

Here are some of the highlights of the decision:

- Minimizing impact on the schools, all units will be one- or two-bedroom, there will be no three-bedroom units;
- 70 percent of the affordable units will be local preference for Cohasset residents, parents or children of Cohasset residents, or employees of the town
- Affordable units must remain so for 30 years and conversion to condominiums is prohibited for at least 30 years
- Avalon must adhere to a comprehensive storm-water management plan detailed in the decision, as well as a landscaping plan;
- Avalon must obtain a groundwater discharge permit from the state DEP prior to construction and must pay for a peer review by the town of the groundwater discharge permit process

As mitigation:

- Avalon is to design and install a sidewalk up Sohier Street to Fair Oaks Lane
- Install a sidewalk southerly along 3A, estimated at $100,000, subject to MassHighway approval; if not, approved, Avalon must provide donate the sum to the town to expend as it wants
- Install traffic signals at 3A & Sohier Street, at an estimated cost of $250,000; if MassHighway does not approve, Avalon must donate the sum to the town to expend as it wants
- Donate or place a conservation restriction to preserve as open space the 10-pluse acres near Boulder Trail, adjacent to Thayer and Whitney Woods
- Contribute $150,000 to the town to expend as it wishes
- Provide $20,000 to cover legal costs incurred during the public hearing
- Use good faith efforts to investigate the feasibility of a daycare center at the site.

Chittick also wants to put to rest "misinformation" around town that all 200 Avalon units would not count toward the town's affordable housing stock.

"That is utter nonsense," he says. "The Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) web site makes the count unequivocal.

"It is not as though there is a gray area — it is black and white."

Chittick says if the 40-B law is adjusted, all indications are that it would be more liberal in determining the "count."

He said the Avalon units must remain rentals for 30 years or as long as the site is used for residential purposes, which ever is longer.

"We feel as comfortable as we can be," Chittick says about the decision. "We protected the town given today's set of circumstances — it's as good a deal as the town can get."

Chittick said it is his "fervent hope" that with the Avalon project out of the way, the town can move ahead with comprehensive long-term plans for whatever subsidized housing it wishes without the threat of a 40B project.

The Water Department has considered appealing the ZBA decision; a citizens group, Cohasset Action, and some abutters also oppose Avalon.

Cohasset water sale to Hingham to provide growing revenue stream

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@WICKED.COM

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said the amount increases from about $28,000 in fiscal year 2005 to about $600,000 in fiscal year2015.

The Water Department estimates it could receive about $600,000 a year when Hingham's Erickson development, dubbed Linden Ponds, is fully built out in about 10 years.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said the amount increases from about $28,000 in fiscal year 2005 to about $600,000 in fiscal year2015.

McNabb said the Water Department's current revenue stream is about $1.7 million per year, so the Erickon agreement would increase revenue by about one-third.

Members of the Water Commission came before Selectmen recently to give an update on the commission's efforts to sell water to the Erickson development. John McNabb, as well as Water Commissioner Rob Kasarmeyer and Supt. of the Water Department Hugh Spurway presented information and answered questions for the board.

Kasarmeyer said the major part of the negotiations are complete and Cohasset would be supplying the water through the Aquarion water company. He said there will be two core agreements, one between Erickson, the Water Commission and Aquarion and a second party agreement with only the Water Commission and Aquarion.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he thinks it's a good flow of revenue and at the end of the day, we'll see a significant source of water.

Selectman Chairman Robert McMorris asked whether there would be a way to track how much water Erickson would use, so the town wouldn't end up paying more than it needed from Kasarmeyer assured every gallon would be accounted for.

Survey on taste and odor of water is planned

Cohasset residents served by the Water Department will be getting the questionnaire in the mail near the end of November.

The Water Commission will soon initiate a survey of the taste and odor issues in Cohasset tap water.

"We fully understand that many Cohasset Water Department customers have complaints about the taste and odor of their tap water," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "We plan to do what we can to improve that situation."

"Even though we have spent about $10 million since 1993 to rehabilitate about 40 percent of the distribution system, have made major upgrades to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant and have started to take more active watershed protection measures — which have improved fire protection and water service throughout Cohasset — the fact is that still there are many customers who have problems with the taste and odor of their tap water," said McNabb.

"This survey will identify the taste and odor issues that exist, the chemical characteristics of the water that cause taste & odor problems, and will recommend solutions," he said.

The survey will include testing of the tap water in a representative sample of locations in Cohasset that will be tested to identify taste and odor issues and a questionnaire that will be mailed to all customers of the Cohasset Water Department asking them to describe the taste and odor of their tap water.

Cohasset residents served by the Water Department will be getting the questionnaire in the mail near the end of November. The Water Commission – consultant, Norfolk Ram, will take

Search for superintendent to begin

Supt. Edward Malvey has made suggestions to the School Committee on what steps should be taken to fill his shoes once he retires at the end of the school year.

"Get the process going," he said, adding it can take a good number of months to find a good candidate, especially with all the superintendent vacancies that will be cropping up around the state. He said the Committee should establish a timeline and put together a brochure highlighting the "good things we're doing," and what the schools want prospective candidates to see.

He said it is also important to find someone with a lot of energy, enthusiasm, and innovation, but it is important not to mislead any contenders. "If someone's specialty is starting programs," they need to know there is no money to do that right now, he said.

He suggested deciding whether the Committee would like to involve a consultant, which they have the right to do, but said because "You're all seasoned School Committee Members," he thinks they can handle it themselves if they so choose. Three of the current members were on the School Committee when Malvey was hired.

Accessory dwellings, big houses, building height and lot coverage

STM could tackle them all

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

If Monday night is a gauge, then the Special Town Meeting should spark debate on the somewhat complex and controversial zoning articles.

At this week's selectmen's meeting, the Planning Board and Growth and Development Committee presented their recommendations on the zoning articles for Monday's Special Town Meeting – but even with votes cast, it's not clear where the boards come down on the issues.

There were some questions that remained unanswered and some members of boards who wanted to change their votes after certain issues were brought up.

Article 15: Permits for Preexisting and Unpermitted Dwelling Units and for New Dwelling Units in Existing Structures

Article 15 was the first item to be tackled, and Planning Board member Peter Pratt said the Planning Board recommended it with a 4-1 vote and the Advisory Committee was unanimously in favor. Selectmen did not vote on the recommendation because they would like Town Counsel to review it and provide feedback.

The article deals with the creation of an amnesty program for those who own illegal apartments in town, or any new apartments which would qualify under the regulations set up in the bylaw. For those who currently own illegal apartments, it would require they come forward to seek a permit for their illegal dwelling and formally register the apartment as being an affordable residence, which the town could count toward their affordable housing stock. For future apartments, amnesty would be granted for illegal dwellings as long as they fell under the affordable regulations.

The town must have 10 percent of its total housing stock deemed affordable per state regulations, and those towns which don't make that cut are vulnerable to 40B projects, which can skirt most town regulations in exchange for providing affordable housing.

If this article passes, someone who owns an apartment which is currently considered illegal by town zoning standards could come forward, seek amnesty and file for a permit to turn it into affordable housing. Both the town and owner would potentially benefit because the apartments would add to the affordable housing stock in town, and the owner would have a legal apartment.

However, Selectman Michael Sullivan said he didn't see why anyone in town would want to come forward and admit to having an illegal dwelling, and then be forced to bring the apartment up to code.

But selectman Tom Callahan said rather than building more developments where for every four units you construct, only one counts toward the affordable housing stock, taking what the town has and making it legally count makes sense.

"I don't like the idea of saying something is illegal, and then we say it's legal to get a few points," Sullivan said.

Pratt said rather than having neighbors "complaining over the back fence," about illegal apartments, the town needs to make them legal by notifying abutters and having a public hearing where the issues can be discussed.

Sullivan said right now, if a person has an illegal apartment, "you're exposing yourself and you may not be able to get your place up to code, and then your neighbors can say something," once the problem is out in the open.

Callahan said Sullivan was assuming apartments wouldn't be up to code, when they very well could be.

But Sullivan said currently, these apartments are considered illegal because they are in conflict with the zoning regulations the town has set and it doesn't make sense to change the zoning laws all over town.

The article also says new units can be created under the Accessory Dwelling Bylaw, and considered under the amnesty program, as long as the apartment is a single unit accessory to an owner occupied single-family dwelling.

"I think it's a crazy bylaw," said Planning Board member Bob Sturdy, who added he was the negative vote on the article. Sturdy doesn't feel comfortable making the zoning bylaws any larger than they already are, and was not comfortable recommending this article.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she thought by adding this aspect of new dwellings, it was really expanding the scope of what the bylaw should have entailed.

However, Pratt said no matter how many people come forward to take part in any aspect of the amnesty bylaw, there are two sunset provisions. First, the amnesty program expires in June 2007, and second, if the owner sells the property, the apartment would revert back to its illegal status and the new owners would be required to file under the amnesty program should they choose to do so.

Selectman Merle Brown thought an apartment that reverted back to illegal status didn't make much sense. "You've still got the apartment, it's just illegal again," he said laughing.

Cook Estate, wires are likely to spark debate Monday night addressing the articles in the order they appear in the Warrant, and expects the zoning articles to spark much discussion. Zoning articles on the Warrant include turning existing apartments into affordable housing units, amending regulations for community buildings, downtown residential dwellings, and large houses. The definition of height in zoning could also be changed. (See related story).

Haddad agreed the zoning articles could be some of the most discussed topics, in addition to the purchase of the Cook Property and the downtown issues.

Here is some of what voters can expect:

• Being asked to authorize the purchase of the Cook Estate for $4-1/2 million for the purpose of developing senior housing in accordance with the town's Senior Overlay District bylaw.

• Being asked to add an "Underground Utility Conversion" section to the current bylaws, which gives voters the final say in whether utility wires will be buried underground in the downtown area as part of the Village Revitalization Project. Voters will also be asked to approve a concept for a possible streetscape, which could include concrete sidewalks and a variety of other materials for borders.

• Capital requests for the schools include $35,000 for a new special education van, and $60,000 for a new school bus. On the municipal side, requests in the amount of $823,000 must be approved to make equipment purchases for departments in town, including a new ladder truck for the fire department, departmental radios for both the fire and police departments, as well as a multi-purpose vehicle, brush chipper, and utility vehicles for the Department of Public Works.

• Spending $90,000 to help cover the costs of the renovation, reconstruction, and repairs made to the police and fire station building located on Elm Street, including furnishings and all costs associated.

• $18,000 to be put into the Private Way Repair Capital Account, which would be used to make temporary repairs to private ways in town.

• $15,000 in funds to make improvements, restore, and upgrade the various memorials around town, which honor those who gave their lives serving the United States. Along those lines, the town will also decide whether to rename the intersection of Beechwood and South Main streets as "Allen A. Buffum Corner," after a World War I veteran who was killed during action in World War II in 1942.

• If voters give the OK, the Office of the Building Commissioner would be required to publish all building permits issued during the previous week in the local paper, excluding those issued for interior alterations and re-roofing. It could also soon be necessary for the office to issue building permits for any signs larger than two square feet, provided the signs are used for identification purposes or are not political signs either attached to a residence or erected in the front yard of a home.

• Appropriating $234,961 to balance the town operating budget; $73,471 to be paid to Deutsch Williams Brooks DeRensis, the firm the town contracts with as Town Counsel; and $28,769 to the town's stabilization fund.

Because the articles will be addressed in order, Marlette expects there could be a good turnout should the meeting carry over to a second night, because of the placement of the zoning articles on the Warrant.

Voters are reminded to arrive on time because Marlette will gavel the meeting into session at 7 p.m. as long as a quorum is present. As soon as the count reaches 100, and it is past 7 p.m., he will begin. He said even with the construction that has been taking place at the school, there should be no problem with parking and anything that is unclear will be marked.

"It worked out very well last time," he said, because students from the high school were asked to direct the traffic.

To keep the meeting moving along, "No one may speak on any subject for more than 10 minutes in total," Marlette said. "No one may speak a second time on any subject for longer than five minutes. No one may speak more than twice on any questions unless all others who have not spoken on the question shall have spoken if they desire to do so." Other reminders on speaking procedures can be found in the Moderator's message, beginning on page 18 of the Warrant.

If you have any questions regarding procedures at Town Meeting, please contact Moderator George Marlette at his office (508) 586-2123, or at home at (781) 383-6809, or see him prior to the start of Town Meeting.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
SMALL WONDER
The trend toward miniaturization in hearing instruments has, perhaps, reached its ultimate form in the completely- in - the - canal (CIC) instrument, which fits deeply into the ear canal. Candidates for CIC hearing instruments are people with mild to severe hearing loss. Because the CIC fits deep into the ear canal, the output is close to the eardrum. Thus, the amount of amplification available is greater for the same amount of power as in larger hearing instruments. Some users report that the sound made available by the CIC is clearer than that of the previous hearing instruments, while others find that listening on the telephone is easier. Because the CIC fits so snugly in the ear canal, acoustic feedback may be eliminated. You may know that you need a hearing aid, but you probably are not aware of the many kinds available today. It takes the knowledge and experience of a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist to match your individual needs with exactly the appropriate device. We care about you and your hearing abilities here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, and we'll do all we can to maximize your hearing potential. Take the first step - have a hearing evaluation at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.
P.S. The microphone of a CIC instrument sits in the ear canal, simulating natural sound reception.

Town Meeting to tackle zoning issues

Article 16: Coverage of buildings

Article 16 deals with the coverage of buildings on a lot, and was presented by Mark DeGiacomo. Pratt said the article was passed 4-1 by the Planning Board and 6-1 by the Advisory Committee, and Selectmen voted unanimously to recommend.

DeGiacomo explained the article was drafted to change the bylaws dealing with the percentage of land a house can cover on its site. Currently, homeowners cannot cover any more than 30 percent of their total property with impervious materials, which in the past has led to homeowners changing a paved driveway to gravel because they were exceeding the 30 percent. The bylaw would change to say the home itself could not cover more than 20 percent of the total land, leaving 10 percent for other features such as driveways, walkways, brick and stone walls.

"How often do we run into this?" asked Sullivan, to which DeGiacomo replied not very often, but in the future "People are going to try to put the biggest homes on lots," and this change could regulate a little better what goes on a site.

Sullivan wondered if the bylaw was too restrictive and what would happen to the lots which currently exist and want to add on to their homes. McMorris asked whether the homes would be grandfathered and after some discussion it was determined any existing homes would have to apply for a variance to have any kind of addition to the home, but would be considered grandfathered to some extent.

"It would impact some [older homes], but very few, and mainly would effect new developments," said DeGiacomo.

Article 17: Multi-family units in the downtown business district

Article 17 deals with multi-family units being allowed in downtown areas above shops. Pratt said the Planning Board recommended it 4-1, the Advisory Committee voted unanimously in favor and the Selectmen voted 3-1 to recommend with Sullivan abstaining.

This article would make it legal for anyone to build multi-family units as of right on the second floor in a downtown business district. Peter Pratt said this article is not tied to any kind of affordability standards.

McMorris wondered if by not specifying the article is meant to deal with the downtown village, this would promote storefronts in other areas of town. Because there are other areas in town where storefronts exist, the changes would affect those areas too, but others in attendance thought the feasibility of other areas actually constructing apartments wasn't enough to change the way the article was written.

Article 18: Large House Site Plan Review

Article 18 was approved unanimously by the Planning Board and 6-1 by the Advisory Committee. Selectmen did not vote on this article and will try to reconvene for a vote prior to Town Meeting.

This article deals with the "mansionization" of homes in the area, said Mike Westcott of the Growth and Development Committee, and would give the town more control over large homes on large sites.

There are 11 points a home would be required to comply with and McMorris and Sullivan both had problems with the fact that the points mainly said "the development shall" instead of requirements pertaining to a home. One of particular concern was number five, which said "the development shall provide for safe vehicular and pedestrian movement within the site and to adjacent ways, including sidewalks, crosswalks and the like." The general consensus was it was ridiculous to say a family home needs crosswalks or safe pedestrian access.

In addition, number six said the landscaping should be in harmony with the character of the neighborhood, and number eight said exposed storage areas, machinery, service areas, truck loading areas, utility areas, and other structures shall be set back or screened, which also does not apply to a family home.

One other point said the building should preserve scenic views from publicly accessible locations.

"You can't deny someone the right to build because someone has a view," said Sullivan.

"Not all these will apply to everyone," said Callahan, but even so, other members were feeling less and less in favor the more the discussion continued.

"I feel my support diminishing," said Planning Board member Chris Ford. "In my own mind, I think we have a problem."

Callahan said a good portion of the article was added by Town Counsel and he thought it was fine the way it was originally drafted, which did not include many of the points which used the word development.

Sullivan said the article is very conflicting as well as subjective and said "We're going to put people through hoops like you wouldn't believe."

Article 19: Height of buildings

Article 19 would set the standards for measuring the height of buildings. It was recommended 4-1 by the Planning Board, and unanimously by the Advisory Committee and Selectmen.

The article would make everyone follow the same guidelines when measuring the height of a home.

Schools strive for energy efficiency

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset schools have begun taking action to help conserve energy and defray utilities costs, after last year's heating and electricity bills came in much larger than had been budgeted for and put the town in a financial bind.

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn came before Selectmen to give an update on the situation and said conservation methods are already in place and will hopefully make a difference when the bills come in this year.

"From a conservation standpoint and a neighborly standpoint," Flynn said the lights at the schools should now be turned off at 8 p.m. when there are no events going on at the schools. Automatic timers have been installed, and while there have been some quirks in the system, lights should now be turned on and off at the appropriate times.

While the Deer Hill and Osgood schools are not usually as busy at night, the Middle High School is more of an issue. Flynn said for safety reasons, it is important to have adequate lighting, especially in the months from November to April when it gets dark earlier, but the possibility of having only certain lights on outside at night was discussed as a way to help cut back on costs. However, with the new fields, outside lighting is necessary, which costs more, but is only a factor during the fall sporting season.

"It is a catch-22 because you have a new building people want to use, but that costs extra money," Flynn said.

However, because the lighting systems in the schools are still so new, setting the timing has taken some getting used to and has not been a completely smooth transition. Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she was at the Middle-High School for a soccer game, and as she was walking back to her car, the lights went out. Flynn said there are still kinks being worked out in the system, and that will be taken care of.

Flynn also said the Deer Hill school has changed all its inside light bulbs and will receive a rebate for roughly $20,000 for being energy conscious. He said the same process will be done for the Middle-High school and a rebate should be given to that school in March. Both rebate checks would be used to help cover the costs of utilities.

In terms of heating, Flynn said the new system at Deer Hill is much different from the old one, and will cost more because of the way it heats the building. Previously, the heating system would take in air and keep circulating and heating that same air all day long. The new system, which Flynn said is, "efficient from a health standpoint, not a utilities standpoint," takes in fresh air all day long and therefore is continuously working to heat cold air from the outside. While it is more efficient, it takes more energy.

Flynn said the heating system at Deer Hill will eventually be calibrated to an even temperature all the time, just as it is at the Middle High School now.

"We've gone back and scrubbed our budget and we need to figure how we're going to get through this thing," said Flynn, adding these simple methods can add up in the long run.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the $260,000 deficit represents a worst-case scenario and he hopes the cost will not be that large again this year. For now, Haddad said some money will be shifted around to help cover the costs, but depending on the money accrued from rebates and how much the bills end up costing, the best the town can do is try to prepare and hope for the best.

Some say door too closed on proposed Cook Estate purchase

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

At Monday's Special Town Meeting voters will be asked to approve the purchase of the Cook Estate property for $4.5 million dollars, for the purpose of building housing under the Senior Overlay District bylaw.

But some residents are concerned the purchase is moving ahead too fast and that voters don't have all the facts to make an informed decision. They are also charging town officials, who conducted negotiations with the Cook Estate heirs in executive session, violated the Open Meeting Law.

But Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Cook Estate purchase provides the town with a unique opportunity. He said deliberations concerning the purchase of real estate were allowed to be conducted in executive session.

Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road; Bernadette Crawford, 64 Old Pasture Road; and Eileen Hart, 48 Old Pasture Road, have filed complaints with both the District Attorney and the Secretary of State, alleging the Board of Selectmen, the Town Manager, and the Advisory Committee may have violated the Open Meeting Law by the alleged use of executive session to retain and fund a consulting firm, GLC Development; that the Senior Housing Committee is not keeping minutes of its meetings; and the women say they have been denied copies of various documents, including the executive session minutes. The District Attorney's office said Tuesday the matters pertaining to the violation of the Open Meeting Law are still an open investigation.

Quigley said she has tried to obtain documents on the Cook property from Haddad since last July. She sent multiple letters requesting both the minutes of executive session meetings and any other information the town has pertaining to the Cook Estate property.

Haddad did not release the executive session minutes until the reason for the executive session had passed, per state law. The minutes are now available at the selectmen's office and were included in the weekly correspondence packet that is available to the public.

Quigley is concerned because the purchase was negotiated behind closed doors, and wonders if the process is being rushed through. She said there are so many questions that have not been addressed that residents can't feel comfortable voting Monday to allocate a large sum of money on a project for which the details have only been public a short time. She said there has not been an adequate forum provided to express concerns such as public hearings, which have been highly publicized for other projects in town, namely Avalon and Cedarmere.

But Haddad said if the town votes to approve the purchase of the property Monday, this is only the beginning of a long process which will unfold over the next year. He said the town needed to act fast because the Cooks had given a window of opportunity to purchase the property and "they can't sit on the property forever." Haddad said the Selectmen have been discussing the matter for six months and the Request for Proposals was put out a month ago. He said the RFP has been changed in its draft form more than once as a result of public feedback. Should a developer not come forward, he said the town is protected and can back out of the deal.

Haddad, who said the property is appraised at $4.1 million, said the money for consultants was approved by the Advisory Committee and was taken out of a reserve fund which is set up specifically for extraordinary and unforeseen costs. Haddad said because the Cooks came to the town, it was unforeseen and "that is what the fund is there for."

Quigley said she obtained a copy of a contract, which she admits was unsigned, but nevertheless represented a proposal given to the town by GLC Development that would charge a fee to be capped at $10,000 a month, for roughly nine to 10 months.

"We don't know that it went out to bid, and there was no vote to approve funds," Quigley said, adding she wonders where the money is coming from to pay for the services that have already started even before approval of the project.

However, Haddad said that contract was not signed because it was a deal he knew the town couldn't make. He said he had $25,000 to spend on the due diligence, OK'ed by the Advisory Committee, and that is all the money he had to work with. The due diligence process had to be done before he would feel he could recommend the site for building at Town Meeting.

Because the town has hired GLC on an hourly basis, which was all the town could afford, a contract is not needed, Haddad said. "It's done on an as needed basis. If I don't call him today, he doesn't charge us for it," he said.

Last fall, the Board of Selectmen sent a letter to the heirs of the Cook Estate, asking if they would be willing to grant the town an easement to access the 8.7 acres of town property that abuts the Cook property, because the town had interest in building senior housing on the parcel of land it owns. The town was told the Cooks weren't interested in providing an easement to the town property, but would be interested in working with the town to create senior housing on the site. The two options at that point were to either consider buying the Cook's 22 acres for $4.5 million or opt for a joint venture to market both properties together for a developer to create senior housing on the combined site. The town opted for the latter and began the process of discussion with the Cook heirs. The town now has plans to build about 87 units of senior housing on the combined 30 acres.

Some Cook Estate answers

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Because there have been many questions expressed around town, there are a few points Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would like cleared up before Town Meeting on Monday.

- On Sept. 16, the Purchase and Sale agreement was signed by Selectmen for the 22-acre Cook Parcel on Sohier Street, which would combine with the adjacent 8.7 acre town owned parcel. A private developer will be solicited to develop approximately 87 units of homes and apartments for seniors. The residences would be affordable for a wide spectrum of Cohasset residents.
- At the Nov. 19 meeting of the Board of Selectmen, the Board approved the final draft of the Request for Proposals for the sale of the combined Cook and Town property for the creation of affordable senior housing. However, the RFP can be modified pending concerns that arise throughout the discussion process. The town is proposing to work with the private sector to achieve its objectives to keep Cohasset seniors in town and insure that a potential development site is developed in a manner that is sensitive to the local community and beneficial to the town.
- The town will not accept any proposals which do not meet its requirements. The Selectmen have set the minimum requirements in the RFP, including a minimum bid price. If no proposals are received which meet these requirements, the transaction will not be completed.
- The property will be taken care of by either a condominium or homeowner's association. The rental units will either continue to be owned by the developer or investor and maintained by a management company. Because the owner will continue to need to rent the market rate units in the apartment buildings at market rates, the landlord will have every incentive to keep all of the units in good condition.
- For those who wonder why the land needs to be developed at all, Haddad said the Cook property will be developed in any case, and probably in a less desirable way without the town's acquisitions of land rights. By Combining the parcels, the Selectmen believe they will be able to reduce the development impacts on the town that might occur if the parcels were developed separately and still take advantage of the private sector creativity and expertise. The Senior Housing Committee has determined there is a need for housing in town for active seniors which this development could provide.
- The nature trails south of the Deer Hill School will not be affected by the development. The nature trails are owned and controlled by the School Department, and no development is planned for that property.
- The Assessors and Planning offices have estimated more than $375,000 in new net tax revenues would be generated by the development.

For further information please contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at (781) 383-4105.

No mold problem at Osgood School

As a precautionary measure, portions of the tiles and wall were taken for additional testing, and the results came back negative.

Supt. Edward Malvey said an odor coming from a kindergarten classroom at the Osgood School recently was due to moisture seeping into the building, not mold.

When the teacher of the class smelled a strange odor in her room, she reported the problem and the DPW was called to investigate the situation.

What workers found was a section of the wall where moisture had seeped in from the outside where a pile of leaves had gathered. Somehow the water seeped in through cracks in the brick and got into the wall.

Malvey said he went up to the school the day the problem was reported and described the odor like that of "wet cardboard."

Because so many schools on the South Shore have had problems with mold recently, the room was gone over thoroughly to check for any mold that may have formed as a result of the moisture, but nothing was found.

As a precautionary measure, portions of the tiles and wall were taken for additional testing, and the results came back negative.

Malvey said additional follow-up tests will be done as an additional precaution, and areas of the building will be checked for possible seepage as well.

Once the affected area of the classroom dries out, the wall will be closed back up, and the entire room will be thoroughly cleaned. Students are expected to be able to return to the classroom by the end of this week or beginning of next.

Affordable Senior Housing on the Cook Estate
Too Good to be True?

At first glance the Cook Estate Development is a good deal, but once you look closely it's not all it's purported to be... not for our seniors and not for Cohasset.

GROWTH: Boon or Bane?
If approved, Avalon Bay & Cedarmere will increase our housing stock by over 300 units. The proposals to build 60 units off Beach Street and 39 units off Beechwood Street bring the total to over 400 potential new units. If 95 units are added at the Cook Estate, this total will now be 497. This is more growth in Cohasset than in the last 20 years combined. Can our Town absorb this much growth and maintain it's character? What will the affect be on our services, schools and infrastructure?

Does it really meet a NEED?
The Town Survey of 2000 states that less than 1/3 of our seniors think it's important to live in segregated age-restricted housing. Why is the Town subsidizing this type of development?

The Senior Overlay was passed to encourage the building of age-restricted housing for Cohasset seniors. It's working. The Cedarmere, Beach Street and Beechwood proposals are either before the Planning Board or in the process of applying. Private development is meeting this need.

How much CONTROL will the Town have?
The combined properties will be sold to a private developer who will be the sole owner. The Request for Proposal (RFP) is the controlling vehicle but sets minimal restrictions beyond our existing zoning bylaws. Development guidelines reflect the objectives and desires of the Town but are not requirements. The RFP states these are intended to be preferences and guidelines only, and they are qualified in the RFP by the words 'should' and 'when possible' not 'shall'.

How much CONTROL will residents have?
If this article passes at Town Meeting, we will have no further input on this project. Selection of the developer will be at the sole discretion of the Board of Selectmen who have set the terms of the RFP. In the permitting phase, the Planning Board is constrained by existing zoning bylaws.

AFFORDABLE for whom?
Affordable is a relevant term. Just like Cedarmere, the for-sale units will be sold at market rate. Many of our seniors will not net enough from the sale of their existing homes to purchase one of these units. These same seniors will not qualify for low or moderate income units because the sale of their homes will net more assets/income than allowed by State guidelines. A Town-sponsored senior housing project should benefit more of our seniors. Otherwise, why are we involved?

What affect will this have on our WATER?
We don't know, but it's not going to make it better. What we do know is that it lies within our watershed, upland from Peppermint Brook, a main tributary to Lily Pond as well as upland from the Sohier Street Wellfield and Sanctuary Pond. We do know no matter how good the technology, septic systems fail, and even if they say it meets EPA drinking water specifications do we really want to drink it?

The RFP has no additional protection for our watershed, nearby wetlands, and wildlife habitats. The concept plan allows buildings and roadways as close to the watershed & riverway as environmental regulations allow.

Why are we being asked to sell publicly-owned open space largely comprised of wetland and riverfront protection areas for high density housing?

This project is being pushed through too fast.
The Cook Estate Development came to public light just 8 weeks before Town Meeting. Since then the public has had little opportunity for comment, and few if any relevant documents have been released for public scrutiny. Despite this, we are being asked to approve a 4.5 million dollar bond to finance the purchase and sale of this property, and to relinquish to our Selectmen all authority over future decisions. Decide in Haste. Rue in Leisure.

Local watercolorist sheds light on Cohasset's world

Paintings on display at Paul Pratt Library

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Boats floating calmly in a harbor are framed in rectangles of gold. Empty chairs seem to rock back and forth from their canvas porch overlooking the harbor. Bright sunflowers and tiger lilies mimic the colors of the sun, with a vibrancy not typically seen in watercolor paintings, a technique which has been mastered by artist JoAnne Chittick.

From now until Dec. 31, a variety of Chittick's paintings will be on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, with an opening ceremony to be held Sunday Nov. 16 from 5 to 7 p.m.

"It's nice to get them out of my studio," where people can enjoy them she said, adding her home studio on South Main Street is filling up fast.

Her paintings mainly consist of coastal scenes, still-life arrangements, flowers, and a variety of boats, but no matter what the subject, the common theme of using light to create interest and define shapes can be seen in all her work.

"I love color," she said, adding she especially likes to depict the rich contrast of light against dark, which is evident in her series of paintings featuring boats on the water. "I look at water all the time to figure how to paint it. I like to paint what I see. The interesting shapes and they way they fit, I try to capture the light on different forms."

And by spending time in the area surrounding her subjects, she is able to really pay attention to the small details that make the scene unique.

In her paintings depicting the Cohasset "Skyline," Chittick concentrates specifically on the highest points of buildings, which are surprisingly detailed pieces of architecture. The steeples of the Second Congregational Church and the First Parish Church, along with the highest point of Town Hall make up her three part series of the skyline, which sometimes may go unnoticed.

"You don't think the Town Hall is that special, but it has such fine workmanship," she said, adding both churches have intricate details as well. By painting on site, Chittick watches as the light changes, which brings out the fine points in the architecture. "The more you look at something, the more character it reveals."

"I love to paint architecture," she said, adding sometimes in the summer she will set up her easel in Boston and paint the different buildings she sees. But Chittick also likes to paint buildings of a smaller scale, and has had many requests by customers who would like watercolor portraits of their homes. She also paints various Cohasset scenes and landmarks, of which some are featured at the North River Frame Shop. Some of her works have also been turned into note cards, for which Cohasset scenes can be purchased at Fleming's in the Village, Scituate scenes can be purchased at the Welch Company in Scituate Harbor, and Hingham scenes can be purchased at Treasures in the Square.

Chittick has been practicing her craft for more than 20 years. While attending Smith College in Northampton Mass., she studied drawing and began to have an interest in wood carving under the teaching of famous artist, Leonard Baskin.

"He was very inspiring and pushed us to challenge our limits and try something new," she said, adding the whole technique of wood carving is interesting because it forces you to see everything in reverse.

But Chittick didn't take any formal painting classes until just after her first child was born. Looking for something interesting to do, she took a watercolor class at the South Shore Art Center and hasn't put her brush down since.

"Watercolors are a real challenge. It takes a long time to become comfortable with it, and I'm still working on it," she said.

Chittick uses two different kinds of watercolors in her exhibit paintings, regular watercolors and the opaque gouache version.

"I like to experiment with different things," she said, adding when using the gouache paints, the paper doesn't shine through and it's a much different result.

But recently, Chittick has become interested in oil painting as well. She inherited a set of oil paints from a friend about a year ago, and said she took an oil painting class and "liked it very much," adding she intends to use them more. She said she finds painting with oils easier than watercolors because you can paint over mistakes, where painting over watercolors "takes away from the freshness." She also said the creamy texture of oil paints makes them nice to work with.

JoAnne Chittick is at work in her studio. Visitors to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library can enjoy an exhibit of Chittick's work through the end of December.

But when she starts painting, it may take all day before she's satisfied with what she has created. She said for some of her larger paintings, if she works non-stop, she can typically finish in one day, but if she needs to, she'll go back to it. She said some of the smaller paintings in her exhibit are basically sketches and don't take nearly the time the larger ones do, but those are some of the paintings she enjoys the most.

"I like to capture the moment," she said, which is why she enjoys her painting titled "Safe Harbor" so much. Painted on Sept. 11, she went down to the docks of the Yacht Club to look out at the water, and wanted to convey her feelings on canvas, that no matter what kinds of destruction and chaos are going on in the world, there will still be places of peace.

Living in Cohasset has provided much inspiration for Chittick, and not just on the canvas. She has been very involved with the community for quite some time, serving on the School Committee and School Building Committee, in addition to her work coordinating meals for Rosie's Place. She moved to the town in 1971 and has been enjoying life here ever since.

"It's a wonderful area, there's almost too much to paint!" she said.

Chittick is a Gallery artist of the South Shore Art Center and the Cambridge Art Association. Her work has been exhibited in numerous solo and juried exhibitions in the Boston and South Shore areas and is represented in many private collections. For more information please call the South Shore Art Center at (781) 383-2787.

DEAN'S LIST

Timothy Vincent Grassey, Class of 2005, of Cohasset, has been named to the dean's list for the spring semester at Babson College. Great work Timothy.

NDA HONOR ROLL

The following Cohasset residents were named to the honor roll for Term I at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham. They are: 10th graders, Caitlin O'Connell and Margaret Pilczak and 11th grader, Megan Stanley. Congratulations to all of you on a job very well done.

YOUNG PHILANTHROPIST

The future of philanthropic giving looks very positive if 10-year-olds like Cohasset's Greyson Elkins are any indication. Greyson decided to celebrate his recent birthday by asking his friends to donate to a worthy cause rather than give him a present. The worthy cause that Greyson chose this year was the South Shore Art Center.

Friends Morgan McCarthy, Greyson Elkins, Ben Pratt, Tucker Oddleifson, Jack Nelson, Eric Studley, Adrian Dunne, Kyle Studley, Dana Childs, Stephen Bumstead, Carly Oddleifson, and Sophie Elkins all joined Greyson for his birthday party. They had a great time while contributing to a wonderful cause!

Art Center Executive Director Sarah Hannan was so proud of these young art enthusiasts, "We are honored to be the recipient of this gift and deeply moved that children believe in what we are doing, and are willing to make a statement about the value of the arts in their community."

The children's generous contribution was the first donation to this year's South Shore Art Center Annual Appeal. Thank you Greyson and friends!

isn't kidding. He makes sure Weir's vision comes to fruition and serves as the director's liaison to everyone from the actors to the web designers.

"Master and Commander" is based on a series of novels written by Patrick O'Brian, and tells the story of a ship's captain in the British Navy, played by Crowe, and a ship's doctor, played by Paul Bettany. When their ship is suddenly attacked by an enemy, leaving the crew and ship battered and bruised, Crowe's character is torn between friendship and his duty as head of the ship, as he chases his foes on a journey across two oceans to the far side of the world.

But working in the movies was not something Weltman always knew he wanted to do. While attending college at Brown University in Providence, R.I., he majored in English, and had planned on being a lawyer like many of his family members are. His father, David Weltman is an attorney with Foley Hoag, and his grandfather and brother have practiced law as well.

But during a summer home from college, the cast and crew for "The Witches of Eastwick" had turned Cohasset Village into a movie set, and Weltman decided he would ask if there was room for an intern, which luckily for him, there was. As the summer drew to a close, and classes were drawing near once again, Weltman suddenly found himself with a decision to make: would he take the ticket he had been given to continue working on the film in Los Angeles, or would he go back to school? He decided school would have to wait.

Having only been on a movie set in Cohasset, Weltman remembers how huge it seemed walking onto the Warner Brothers' lot. Added to that, he was greeted by a completely surreal scene, as he walked onto the stage and was instantly transported back to his hometown. Giant screens of the Cohasset seascape hung in the background, and people held boats in front of a screen to make them look as if they were sailing by the replicated beach house.

Andy Weltman on location on Bartolome Island in the Galapagos. The backdrop is featured in the film, "Master and Commander," starring Russell Crowe.

"I'll never forget it," he said.

But when production of the movie was finished, Weltman knew he wanted to finish school, so he moved back to the east coast. However, after graduation, he knew the career path he wanted to follow, so he hopped a flight to move back to California permanently in 1987.

"It was a very hard transition," Weltman said, adding he didn't have a job moving out there, and working in the movies is a very unpredictable career. "It's not a very easy field to go into. It's who you know, and luck."

But fortunately for him, Weltman had met the right people in Cohasset and landed a job within six weeks.

But starting a new job wasn't enough to quell the overwhelming homesickness he felt being on the other side of the country. In fact, he said he watched the "Witches of Eastwick" so many times, the movie theater employees knew who he was.

"I was so homesick they let me come in to watch the opening credits," he said, which showed various Cohasset scenes and reminded him of home.

But the homesickness passed and now he can say he has had a hand in not only the "Witches of Eastwick," but "Emperor of the Sun," "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?," "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," "Dead Poet's Society," "Green Card," and "The Perfect Storm," to name a few.

Because the new film, "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World," is set during the time of the Napoleonic wars, there was a lot of history and research that needed to be done prior to filming. For one solid year, Weltman was in charge of the research efforts to be sure historical accuracy was portrayed throughout the film. Now that filming is complete, he's overseeing the foreign language translation of the film, to ensure no matter what language the film is shown in, the context will be accurate. In addition, he is overseeing the movie's release to DVD, compiling the director's cut with deleted scenes, and overseeing the movie's web site.

"It has been one of the most wonderful professional experiences of my life," he said.

But the prestige that comes with working on million dollar films doesn't seem to phase Weltman in the least.

"In some ways it seems very glamorous, but it can be a double-edged sword," he said, adding it can be very easy to lose perspective if you stay in Hollywood too long.

Weltman lives 10 miles south of Los Angeles in a little beach town with "a lot of surfers." He said it's a very quiet, peaceful area which reminds him a lot of Cohasset. While growing up, Weltman lived on Gammons Road, where his parents David and Lois Weltman still live today. Weltman said when he's not working, he tends to spend time with people who aren't involved with the movies, which helps keep him grounded. But he does enjoy working with the people he has over the years.

"My whole career has been based on relationships. I care about the projects and the people," he said. "No matter what job you have, it's really about the people you work with."

Weltman will be traveling with some of those people to premiers in Europe next week and he's very interested to see how the public will react to "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World."

"With 'Dead Poet's Society,' I didn't think it was going to do well, but I didn't care because I loved it," he said, adding he's really proud of this film as well.

"It's been an interesting journey," he said.

Wild turkey release at Wompatuck State Park

With a flurry of feathers, a special flock of wild turkeys will stretch their wings in front of captivated onlookers during a Thanksgiving wild turkey release at Wompatuck State Park in Hingham on Nov. 18 at 10 a.m.

"The Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife and the National Wild Turkey Federation are hosting the special release to celebrate the 30th anniversary of wild turkey restoration in Massachusetts.

"The partnership and support of the National Wild Turkey Federation has been an integral part of our successful restoration of the wild turkey in Massachusetts," said Wayne MacCallum, MDFW Director.

During the event, wild turkeys will be released into the wild from special boxes designed to safely transport wild turkeys from the locations where they were trapped to the release site at Wompatuck.

"Massachusetts has been a leader in the comeback of the wild turkey in New England," said Dr. James Earl Kennamer, NWTF Senior Vice President of Conservation Programs. "We commend the MDFW for its efforts to restore wild turkey populations and our hunting heritage, especially during the 30th Anniversary of Massachusetts' successful restoration program."

"It is very fitting that we honor this great holiday by releasing wild turkeys along the same stretch of coast as their landing site."

— Rob Keck, National Wild Turkey Federation

The release also will be a rare opportunity for everyone to learn more about wild turkey restoration and the importance of conservation and our hunting heritage during a time when many people are thinking turkey.

"Our national Thanksgiving tradition is based on the pilgrims' now famous meal," said Rob Keck, NWTF CEO. "It is very fitting that we honor this great holiday by releasing wild turkeys along the same stretch of coast as their landing site."

According to Keck many people don't seem to realize how much influence the wild turkey has had in America. It fed the pioneers during our quest to become a nation, and continues to feed many today through the millions of dollars spent by turkey hunters each spring and fall on everything from food, firearms, guides, trucks, gasoline, lodging and more.

"We at the NWTF urge everyone to attend, so they can learn more about this grand symbol of Thanksgiving," Keck said.

For information about the MDFW, call 508-792-7270 or visit the website at www.masswildlife.org.

To learn more about the NWTF or the turkey release call 1-800-THE-NWTF or visit the website at www.nwtf.org.

About the NWTF

In 1973 when the National Wild Turkey Federation was founded, there were an estimated 1.3 million wild turkeys and 1.5 million turkey hunters. Thanks to the work of wildlife agencies and the NWTF's many volunteers and partners, today there are more than 6 million wild turkeys and approximately 2.6 million turkey hunters. Since 1985, more than $175 million NWTF and cooperator dollars have been spent on over 24,000 projects benefiting wild turkeys throughout North America

Towns to meet on four-quad gates

State Sen Robert L. Hedlund, R–Weymouth, has organized a meeting with Secretary of Transportation and MBTA Chairman Daniel A. Grabauskas to discuss the issue of including four-quadrant gates in the design for the construction of the Greenbush line.

Hedlund will host the meeting with himself, Grabauskas and officials from the impacted communities of Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate, and Weymouth. At this meeting, Hedlund will join local officials in the effort to press the MBTA to utilize four-quadrant gates at grade crossings along the Greenbush line.

"The use of four-quadrant gates along the Greenbush corridor is an issue that directly impacts the public safety, traffic patterns, and character of every community along the line," said Hedlund. "I am pleased that Secretary Grabauskas is being receptive to our concerns on this important matter."

The MBTA has recently informed the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth and Scituate that it is planning to go back on earlier pledges to include four-quadrant gates at grade crossings throughout the Greenbush lines in favor of the less expensive and less safe two-quadrant gates, Hedlund said. This has sparked dissatisfaction from local officials, and has led to today's meeting

MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said Tuesday the MBTA has not changed its position on four-quad gates.

Stand up and be counted!

Special Town Meeting gets underway at 7 p.m. sharp, Monday at the middle-high school. We urge you to attend and please be prompt because the evening's agenda is packed with weighty issues affecting everything from burying the wires in the village to purchasing the Cook Estate for senior housing.

For those of you who might be "first-timers" and have never attended at Town Meeting — you don't know what you are missing.

Town Meetings are not boring; on the contrary they are just the opposite. The setting provides great theater. Often, a single individual with impassioned rhetoric can sway voters to his or her way of thinking. Many who attend with a particular vote in mind, change their view and vote the other way after listening to the arguments on both sides.

Over the years, the biggest complaint we've heard about Town Meeting is special interest groups can dominate the arena and get their way by bringing in the votes.

We've never agreed with that way of thinking. There is nothing preventing those of the opposing view from attending and letting their voice be heard.

OK, OK, we're Town Meeting groupies. We wouldn't have gone into journalism if we didn't like government and enjoy seeing how it works.

But there are others out there too, just like us. We see the same faces at Town Meeting year after year. While Town Meeting "regulars" come out of a sense of civic duty, they also enjoy the most venerable form of government in the country.

Another benefit of Town Meeting is that issues are thoroughly explained. Voters listen to the pros and cons, can ask questions, and listen to the answers before making up their mind.

There are a lot of very important Articles, which are items of business before Town Meeting, to be tackled on Monday, not the least of which is the precedent-setting purchase of the Cook Estate for the purpose of developing much-needed senior housing in town.

Please make a point to be there Monday — come with an open mind — and participate in the process.

You won't regret it and you might even enjoy it. We look forward to seeing you there.

Logan, Ford file nomination papers

Polly Logan of Cohasset and Conley W. Ford of Scituate, both candidates for Republican State Committee in the Norfolk and Plymouth district, filed their nomination papers at the election division, Boston. The Massachusetts Republican State Committee, which elects one man and one woman from each of the senatorial districts, is the governing body of the Republican Party in the state. The State Committee establishes party policies, provides a central headquarters, gives leadership to the city, ward and town committees in electing Republican candidates to office, raises money for the purposes of the party, and seeks new members for the Republican Party.

All citizens are urged to vote Tuesday, March 2. One can vote at town hall by absentee ballot, Conley Ford and Polly Logan are going to have a registration drive to encourage unenrolled voters to register Republican.

Hedlund holds Town Hall hours

The November office hours for Senator Robert Hedlund will be held at the Cohasset Town Hall on Thursday. Nov. 20 from 12 to 1 p.m. on the second floor in the 2A vestibule.

Hedlund also maintains a district office at 66 Sea St., North Weymouth that is accessible Monday through Friday for constituents and appointments with the senator. The telephone number is 781-340-9866 or at the Statehouse 617-722-1646.

Supports train station in Cohasset Village

DOUGLAS FOY
CHIEF OF COMMONWEALTH DEVELOPMENT

I am writing to urge reconsideration of the location of the Cohasset railroad station on the Greenbush line.

I am not unaware of the problems your department has faced nor the cost involved in changing plans at this stage.

The recommendation of the Route 3A site was made at the height of the protest against restoring train service at all. However, now that the question has been resolved, I think that in the interest of the future welfare of Cohasset it would be worthwhile to re-examine locating the Cohasset station in the downtown area.

Cohasset has the unique good fortune to have preserved its village character with its Town Hall, churches and homes surrounding its central common and the Post Office, Library, Police and Fire Departments, charitable facilities, with stores, inns, and eating places close at hand. It is truly a New England village. Yet it is anything but quaint; it is real. While many of our people commute, justifying the renewed need for rail service, a great many make their living right here, including, as has been the case, since it was first settled, a very sizeable fleet of fisherman.

From the point of view of safety as well as operational efficiency, I suggest that it would be preferable to have the stop located at the downtown end of the big curve where the station used to be, rather than on a straightaway on a lonely vacant lot 400 feet from the Hingham Town Line.

In the light of new realities and the long term good of the Town of Cohasset, I would deeply appreciate your early consideration.

A 'no' vote on Article 5 urged

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to express my deep disappointment with the decision by a majority of the members of the Board of Selectmen to bring forward Article 5 on the Special Town Meeting warrant. Although the article purports to amend a town by-law so as to force the utility companies to remove all overhead power lines from the village area, the real purpose of Article 5, based on my reading of the stories in the Mariner the past two weeks, appears to be a back-door means of imposing a 2 percent surcharge on all utility customers in the town to pay for the costs of burying the power lines as part of the village renovation project.

I spoke at last fall's special town meeting in favor of the article to place on the ballot the question of town assumption of the costs of burying the power lines by means of a property tax increase. I also voted in favor of the project. However, a majority of townspeople decisively rejected the measure. So what part of the word "No" does the majority of the selectmen not understand?

I supported last year's article, but I am opposed to Article 5 for the following reasons:

1) If the estimated $900,000 cost of burying the power lines had been assessed with our property taxes, each taxpayer would have been able to deduct that additional expense from his or her income for purposes of their federal income tax. Our town residents collectively would have realized a savings of about $250,000 on their federal income taxes, bringing the actual cost of the project to taxpayers down to $650,000. But under the selectmen's utility surcharge plan, we will pay the full $900,000 cost with no tax benefits.

2) A surcharge in utility bills is a more regressive means of paying for this project than the property tax would have been. If the $900,000 cost had been assessed with our property taxes, those with the biggest homes, presumably the wealthiest people in town, would have borne the greatest burden. But the opposite will be true under the selectmen's proposed 2 percent surcharge plan. Indeed, many lower-income people may even end up paying more than higher-income people if the former have more electric appliances than the latter (e.g., electric ranges and clothes dryers.) My electric bill is $160 per month, but a friend with a four-bedroom house and with kids has an electric bill of $60 per month because she has gas appliances. Many renters have primarily electric appliances and no doubt the low and moderate income housing proposed in the senior overall projects also will have electric appliances. Moreover, unlike the property tax, low-income seniors will not be able to defer these utility surcharges. Thus, the net effect of Article 5 is that those low and moderate income people we are trying to help by means of the senior overlay projects will be the ones who will have it socked to them with higher utility bills.

3) From what I gather from the Mariner stories and my reading of Article 5, the utility companies now will have carte blanche to add a 2 percent surcharge onto our bills for an indefinite period of time. Does anyone doubt that by the time their accountants get done figuring out the costs of this project, we will end up paying far more than the $900,000 which has been estimated? From my lifetime of experience with utility companies, I have no confidence that the reporting provisions of the proposed by-law (which require the companies to provide annual reports to the town about their receipts and expenditures for this project) will result in an accounting process which is faithful to the original estimates.

4) Asking our citizens to pay for the $900,000 cost of this project was an iffy proposition last year. But it truly makes no sense now given the worsening fiscal climate for our town. In light of reports of a $2 billion deficit which the state is facing next year, Cohasset can expect further cuts in our local aid and aid for education. If the selectmen want to take $900,000 out of our pockets for needed projects in our community, burying the utility lines in the village would be the last thing on anyone's list. Indeed, our town is still so cash-strapped, that we have been unable to turn back on the many street lights in town which were turned off during the last fiscal crisis in order to save a few hundred dollars per month. What's next — will all of the street lights in town be shut off? (But at least the lines will be buried!)

5) My principal objection to Article 5 however, is the manner in which this has been presented to us by a majority of the board of selectmen. This is coming to us under the guise of an amendment to a town by-law directed at the utility companies, but the bottom line is that consumers will be the ones paying for the cost of burying the village utility lines. A tax is a tax is a tax – and people are not stupid. There is no doubt in my mind that once people start seeing this surcharge appear on their cable, electric, and phone bills, month-after-month-after-month, for years to come, they will be outraged at the way that this has been foisted upon them after they already had voted not to do it.

After reading the stories in the Mariner the past two weeks, my initial reaction was that I never will vote for an override in this town again. I realized that if I am feeling this way — and I have voted for every override and school project since have I lived here — the negative reaction among those who range from neutral to hostile on tax issues will be even more pronounced once people start paying these surcharges month-after-month.

Article 5 is nothing less than a deceitful means to accomplish the goals of a small, special interest group which was unable to obtain its objective at the ballot box (and they had my support at that time!). The majority of the selectmen who voted for this article should be ashamed of themselves for failing to accept the clear will of the people and for launching this end-around maneuver. In my view, the worst aspect of Article 5 is that it threatens to drain whatever reservoir of credibility the selectmen still may have with the average taxpayer and homeowner as we enter a time of incredible fiscal difficulty.

Case for legalizing existing apartments

TO THE EDITOR:

As a leading proponent of Article 15, I must respond to Mr. Quigley's letter of last week.

Art. 15 arises out of the Master Plan (emphasis on Plan), attempting to address both the mandates of the citizenry "to preserve the character of Cohasset" and to address the affordable housing issue. Art. 15 copies a bylaw from Barnstable to create an amnesty for illegal apartments that already exist in Cohasset. In exchange for legality, the apartment would become affordable under state definitions for the duration of the current ownership.

I happen to agree with the state's premise of encouraging the development of affordable housing in all communities. I do not subscribe to a gated community mentality that would prevent apartments from being created in an otherwise single-family home community. At the same time, however, I believe that 40B is the wrong way to approach this issue, and I oppose the ZBA's Avalon decision on principle as well as on the merits. That being said, I am enough of a realist to accept that 40B is the law, and like it or not, we must play on its playing field. To ignore this reality, to think and study

MASTER PLAN

RICH SWANBORG

The final reviews and fully published Master Plan are finally wrapping up. There will be highlights at the Nov. 17 Town Meeting, and a full plan available for anyone who wants to either receive an electronic, or published, copy by the end of this month.

This effort has taken three years and required extensive public meetings, reviews with town boards (especially the Planning Board and Selectmen), formal town surveys, and the use of consultants to help apply best practices from other successful towns. This effort revealed a number of major issues that rose above all other in the minds of residents. Near term concerns include fiscal management, train impacts, town services and resource protection. Long term, residents were clear on their priorities for the future:

- maintaining town character, open space and resources (over 90 percent agreed on this)
- managing growth (75 percent believe house sizes should be limited and 70 percent agreed that residential development should be limited)
- providing appropriate senior and affordable housing solutions and improved waterfront access

The plan covers everything from open space and walkways to economic development and cultural heritage. It outlines a vision for the future of Cohasset, with an inventory of assets, liabilities, specific goals and recommendations with nine major areas:

1. Land Use
2. The Waterfront
3. Natural and Cultural Resources

The plan covers everything from open space and walkways to economic development and cultural heritage

4. Open Space and Recreation
5. Housing
6. Economic Development
7. Community Facilities and Public Services
8. Transportation and Mobility
9. Action / Implementation Plan

November Town meeting features several articles (15, 16, 17, 18, 19) that represent thoughtful, but modest changes to the zoning bylaws to preserve character, encourage appropriate housing solutions and prevent further development abuses. Cohasset is under a great deal of development pressure right now and these measures are designed to provide more control and better solutions to some of the immediate challenges we face in protecting the character of Cohasset:

Maintaining Character — The average house size has nearly doubled since 1980. If this trend continues we will have houses built to the maximum size permitted. While property rights need to be considered, it is time to take a fresh look at our zoning laws to moderate the influence of oversized houses built on small lots. Article 18 was created to limit the size of housing on small lots and provide a public review for homes over a certain threshold to avoid overbuilding and ensure public discussion.

Affordable Housing – The Master Plan cannot control the threat of 40B challenges by developers. It can only offer smarter and more appropriate solutions to integrating affordable housing into the community. Our growth calculations for the entire town forecasts 500 to 1,000 units assuming that existing town zoning laws are honored. However, that number could be far higher under current 40B law, as all of our commercial property is also vulnerable to high-density residential development. This threat makes it more important than ever to proactively implement changes that will allow us to increase our housing stock in a manner that will maintain character and control. By studying the best practices from other towns such as Lincoln and Barnstable, we have evidence that offering amnesty for current illegal in-law apartments and encouraging rental units in the downtown area are effective deterrents to larger more invasive developments.

Even though we project a small number of current apartments will convert to affordable, the 40B mathematics are quite convincing. For instance, if just six units are created, this reduces our affordable "total town" count by 60 units. Do you want 60 units added to the town in a densely packed location, or six units spread throughout the town? Articles 15 and 17 are intended to show the state that we are open to solving our affordability issues, and may help us create affordable housing that is less onerous then just building more apartment complexes.

It is time for all of us to get proactive in the maintenance and management of Cohasset's future to protect what needs to be protected and build only what needs to be built. Before those decisions are taken from our control. We must protect our environment, our resources and our character.

Please join us in voting yes on articles 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19.

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth the movie that every red-blooded 11-year-old American boy simply had to see was a European film called "Ecstasy." And you know those Europeans!

In it a nubile young Austrian girl named Hedy Kiesler was reported to have doffed her clothing and splashed and cavorted in the altogether for a full 10 minutes while the cameras rolled and audiences watched through befogged glasses.

I say reported because I never got around the seeing "Ecstasy" since it never played the neighborhood houses like the State in Quincy or the Loring in Hingham and the Watch and Ward Society was still looking out for my morals in the Boston cinemas.

Hedy Kiesler, the actress who was 19 at the time "Ecstasy" was made, later appeared in American films as Hedy Lamarr. I think I saw every one of them but she never took off her clothes again. Not all of them, anyway.

I thought of Hedy Kiesler and "Ecstasy" the other day when I learned that Meg Ryan, the cute little girl next door from "Sleepless in Seattle," is about to take it all off for the cameras. And no one seems to be batting an eye!

The name of the flick is — all you readers who are under 17 close your eyes now — "In the Cut" in which Meg plays an English teacher with a lousy love life and a half-sister, Jennifer Jason Leigh, an old pro at the clothes doffing game.

And that's not all. A-list actresses Nicole Kidman dances and lounges around in the nude in "The Human Stain," and Gwyneth Paltrow takes it all off in "Sylvia," and, as a veteran of Shannon Tweed skin flicks on late night Cinemax, I'd like to know what's going on here.

"It's about box office, as the permissiveness of movies leads to competition to push the sexual envelope," says Elayne Rapping, professor of women's and media studies at the University of Buffalo. In other words, look to the money.

Every new social development has to have its chronicler and for naked actresses it's Jim McBride, known to the trade as "Mr. Skin," who can tell you every nude scene in mainstream Hollywood movies dating back to Clara Bow in 1927.

He does on his Web site — don't look now, kids — "mrskin.com" and in frequent appearances on the Howie Carr Show on WRKO, where we learned that Julia Roberts has never done a nude scene except for a second or two an hour and 35 minutes into "Pretty Woman."

Incidentally, "Mr. Skin's Skincyclopedia" is due out in early 2005 when we can learn that Meryl Streep took it all off in "The Bridges of Madison County." So did Clint Eastwood but who cares. Reese Witherspoon did it in "Twilight," and Molly Ringwald in "Malicious."

"It is very rare for an actress who had a good nude scene to win an Oscar," said Mr. Skin, but Halle Berry did just that in "Monster's Ball," which won for her an Academy Award in 2001.

"An actress is now more likely to undress for a director who she feels is making a work of art," says Brad Prager, who teaches film culture at the University of Missouri.

Now if "Ecstasy" would only come around again!

HEALTH NOTES

Pneumonia can be difficult to understand

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO MARINER

Recently, there have been several communications with the Board of Health about pneumonia. At least three families in town have reported serious cases of pneumonia traveling among family members. Pneumonia, how it's acquired and passed to others, as well as its diagnosis, treatment and morbidity statistics are difficult to understand.

The first thing to know about pneumonia is that there are many types of the disease because pneumonia merely means an acute or chronic disease marked by inflammation of the lungs, and caused by viruses, bacteria, physical or chemical agents. Accordingly, there are several forms of pneumonia and there is vaccine for only one: Pneumococcal, caused by the bacterium Diplococcus pneumoniae. Other forms of bacterial pneumonia, such as Klebicella pneumonia are not defeated by this vaccine, and viral pneumonia is not affected at all. A test of the sputum (coughed up spit) from a sick patient is required to determine which form of pneumonia is affecting a patient.

Years ago, when we knew less about the various agents causing disease, pneumonia was frequently called the old person's blessing because it killed so many elderly ill patients. Now, however, we know more about the specifics of an illness, and we know that viruses, through natural selection have changed and are infecting a greater diversity of people; young, old, and all those who might otherwise have avoided a specific illness.

Clearly communication, travel, transportation, population density, and togetherness all affect the transfer of the various viruses, bacteria and other agents which cause illness.

Specific situations cause groups of people to develop the same illness. Members of families, because of close associations, rapidly spread certain types of pathogens which can exist independently for a time in our environment. Such things as the SARS virus, or the Diplococcus bacterium, or the Rhinovirus, which causes the common cold are examples.

Many pathogens can live independently on articles in everyday use, which is why we carefully wash our dishes and silverware and are so careful about meat and vegetable storage temperature. But many of these agents can live for extended times on hands, lips, and the things they touch.

These are called fomites such as playing cards, toys, door knobs, keys and locks, and the myriad of other things we handle.

In some countries, face masks are de rigueur — but it's better to wash your hands frequently.

"The majority of infections are spread by touching," said Dr. Elaine Larson of the Columbia University School of Nursing. "Keeping your hands away from your face, and washing them, can make a big difference — just rubbing with water and wiping with a paper towel removes a lot of germs." More are removed by soap. Plain soap doesn't kill bacteria, but instead emulsifies them so they wash down the drain.

Dr. John Boyce, chief of infectious diseases section at Hospital of St. Raphael in New Haven, Conn., coauthored new hand-hygiene guidelines for health-care settings, published in 2002 by the Center for Disease Control. For the average person, he said, hand sanitizers can be useful "when you don't have ready access to a sink, water, and clean towels."

Elementary-school students are often considered cold-virus breeding grounds. But when three classrooms in Pennsylvania were instructed on hygiene and hand-sanitizer use, absenteeism because of infectious illnesses dropped significantly, according to an article published last year in the American Journal of Infection Control. Children in study classrooms who cleaned their hands more frequently got sick less often.

In order to help control infection, it's good practice to:

- Find out what agent is doing the harm.
- Find out how it likes to spread
- Identify what will curtail the dissemination of the agent.
- Practice hygiene methods which will limit the contagion of the dangerous agent.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

some more, and to ultimately do nothing is not a practical policy. Such a policy, followed in this town since the last 40B threats of the late '80s, has led us to the present state of affairs.

The underlying presumption of 40B is that suburban zoning is exclusionary. This was stated in a recent court decision that also holds that your town boards, which opposed Avalon, will be unable to appeal a decision clearly not in the best interests of the town. We are thus constrained from fighting 40B head-on, and so if we want to be in control of our own destiny, we must look for other solutions within our own power. Arts. 15 and 17 are such proposals, as were the Accessory Dwelling Bylaw ("ADB") and the Senior Overlay District ("SOD"). I would suggest that no one alternative solution is the answer.

Mr. Quigley incorrectly equates Art. 15 to the ADB. The amnesty program is very different from the ADB. The ADB permits creation of new apartments, whereas Article 15 is a legalization of existing, illegal apartments. The distinction is important in measuring actual impact on the town. The ADB correctly has detailed standards to govern the creation of a new housing unit. Since Art. 15 apartments already exist, design standards need not be as detailed, although any such apartment must be code-compliant.

The apartments addressed by Art. 15 are already among us. The thought is to have as much of our existing housing stock working for us and counting for us under 40B as possible, trading illegality for the 40B benefit. We cannot comply with 40B without also building some new units. However, the more we have counted amongst existing housing, the less new housing is needed, and the less the impact upon the character of Cohasset, a guiding principle we took very seriously. Remember that 40B works by requiring only 25 percent of units be affordable. Thus, we need 100 units built to get 25 affordable, a 4-1 ratio. Under the amnesty, all of what is approved is both affordable and counts, at a 1-1 ratio. There is thus a multiplier benefit by qualifying existing housing as opposed to building new.

In answer to Mr. Quigley's other questions:

1. Nothing is wrong with the ADB per se. I guess no one wants a new in-law apartment. Granted, in my view, the ADB was a knee-jerk reaction to our senior housing lobby, and to the extent it allows for new apartments anywhere, I would tend to agree with Mr. Quigley's view. I would not mourn its repeal. However, until we have other tools in place, it also serves a purpose. To overcome the state's presumption of being exclusionary, bylaws like this on the books provide a concrete example of our non-exclusionary intent. With the state, what's on paper is as important, almost more so, as what is on the ground. Art. 15, even if also under-utilized, will serve that this same purpose without changing anything about Cohasset as it now exists.

2. The exact number of illegal apartments is unknown. Barnstable has approved 60 amnesty units in about two years. Maybe a drop in the bucket, but 60, or the proportionate number in Cohasset, is not an inconsequential number to add to one's 40B count. Any number is good compared to the 4-1 hit a 40B project brings. It is also reasonable to assume that the apartments that exist a) are small, one bedroom at most, and b) thus do not generate a large number of schoolchildren, if any, and c) already have tenants that probably meet the rental and income limits of 40B. They do not adversely impact the quality of the town at present. They simply do not count for us & should.

3. Whether we should excuse the illegality is a legitimate question. This town, and others, does a lousy job enforcing these types of bylaws, and it has only come up in Cohasset recently when a neighbor turned someone in. This is a value judgment the town must make. We who put together the Master Plan think that waiving the illegality in return for the benefit, while not adding any new units to the town and thus preserving its character, is worth the trade-off

4. Does Avalon make this unnecessary? NO! First of all, Avalon is not permitted yet (if rumored appeals occur), and until it is, we are vulnerable. Second, even if Avalon is approved, it does not achieve 40B's 10 percent threshold! If the ZBA or anyone else is saying that, they are plain wrong. We remain vulnerable and two developers in the mix in town at present have threatened 40B's use. Do the math. Tools such as this proposal might make up the difference, and allow us to fend off these other threats, without adverse impact or new construction.

5. As for the SOD projects, if they are built along with Avalon, yes we will reach the 10 percent threshold and yes we'll have 400 new units (half senior-only). If they don't get built, however, and there are ifs, where are we? Unprotected as usual, blissfully wishing 40B away. Look at how many 4013s our neighbors face - I suggest Avalon would not be the end for us. While the SOD projects bring us 40B benefit, and are thus important to show as such to the state, I think they also must be judged on other grounds, independent of 40B, Art. 15 and the like, i.e. whether it is important to have downsizing options for seniors available in the community.

6. I don't buy the slippery slope argument. If we are assured of 40B protection, we can undo what we have done or will do at this town meeting. Art. 15, however, properly understood, has little impact on existing or future Cohasset.
